WASHINGTON

When we come near the anniversary of the birth of "The Father of his Country," we naturally think of the connection between religion and patriotism. The Psalmist seems to have had something like this in view when he said, "In the name of our God we will set up our banners." A banner is a symbol of Law and Order, of the Government. The Stars and Stripes are the symbol of our Government, of all we hold dear and sacred. He seems to think in saying "our God" that there is some connection between God and Religion and Government.

A writer in the New York Observer gives an anecdote of Washington, which came to him directly from a relative who died in 1854, and who was a child in the family which Washington was visiting at the time of the incident narrated. On the morning of his departure for White Plains, just before the battle of Chatterton Hill, General Washington, in the presence of the members of the family and others; offered prayer, during which he quoted Joshua 22:22. "The Lord of Gods, he knoweth, and Israel he shall know; if it be in rebellion, or if in transgression against the Lord, save us not this day." The Yonkers statesman says of this incident.

"When it is considered that the words were uttered by the Commander-in-Chief of the Revolutionary forces at such a supreme crisis in the long struggle for independence, when the chances for success seemed more than doubtful, all that read them will regard this utterance as being eloquent and impressive to a degree unequaled by any other human expression of which history contains a record."

The name of Washington stands for ideal Americanism, and let this be our theme. When we see a thousand electric cars clothed in light and flying amid the darkness, or a thousand lights burning brightly, we say there is somewhere a dynamo, and we can trace them all back to a single source.

It has been well said that "A great man is the dynamo of society." Great eras are born in great personalities. At the beginning of the career of every great nation stands a great man embodying in his personality al the essential qualities of that nation

Law and government began wit. Moses, the culture of Athens with th Crecops, and the wisdom of Thebes with Cadmus. So the rivers of the waters of constitutional American life that have made the plains and valleys of our native land bud and blossom as the rose, find their Itaska their source, in a single personality—that of George Washington. Was there ever a character, a single life worth so much to any one nation.

Washington had the physical basis for a hero, a geniue for hard, painstaking work, high courage, nerve of steel, practical common sense, foresight, knowledge of men; and the bond of perfection that held all these splendid endowments together was his matchless unselfishness.

He was not a politician, but a statesman of the first order. Never self-seeking, proof against that popular clamor that is often misguiding; unswerving under wrong influence: he avoided and never tried to create waves of popularity. In character, as in figure, he was upright, not subject to moral deflection.

Lastly, one characteristic that witnessed the greatness of the man may not be passed by. No man was more basely slandered than was he, especially while he was carrying the heavy burdens of the war was he the subject of the machinations of his rivals, the insults of the jealous, and through all he maintained the silent dignity of the everlasting mountains; his only appeal was to God and to posterity; that appeal seldom fails; it did not fail him.

Even in this little world of ours, if one has patience to tarry a little, the sober second thought does the work; the crown is as certain as anything earthly can be. So it is, and was with Washington; it has been placed on his brow, and there it remains fadeless—and forever.—Selected.

DARKEY WAS NOT IMPRESSED

His Opinion of the Chief Justice of United States Supreme Court Decidedly Not High.

John Marshall was a great man and, like many great men, he became at times very much absorbed with his thoughts. Riding along the bad roads of North Carolina one day in a gig the chief justice of the United States Supreme court was revolving a point of law in his mind and not paying a great deal of attention to the road. His horse turned out of its own accord and the gig ran over a sapling and tilted so sharply that the judge was aroused from his reverie. It seemed to him that he was hung up on the sapling, for he could turn neither to the right or left. An old negro happened along, scratched his head a moment and said:

"Marse, whut fer you-all doin' back yo' horse often that saplin'?"

"That's so," replied Marshall, who had not thought of that simple solution, and promptly backed away from the obstruction. He thanked the old man and was about to reward him, but found he had no money in his pocket. "Never mind, uncle," he said as he drove away. "I'll stop at the tavern and leave something for you."

The old negro was not impressed, but for fear he might overlook a bet stopped at the tavern and there the landlord gave him a dollar, which Marshall had left for him.

"What did you think of him?" the landlord asked.

"Well," answered the negro, "well, he was a gen'leman, sho' nuff, but," and he patted his forehead significantly, "'pears to this darky like they ain't much o' nuthin' in that man's hald."—Kansas City Star.

The Girl in the Car

By LULU LANGDON

(© 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Harkins hurried out of the office building, found his car in the customary spot, disconnected the locking device with his key, and in a moment was threading his way among the north-bound vehicles; out on the Parkway he speeded, for the night was cold and clear, and the sting of early autumn was in the air.

In Westchester, a cozy bachelor dinner awaited him, then an easy chair, a pipe and book by the log fire. Why marry? he asked himself doubtfully, as he swung around a curve into a lonely stretch of road.

Something cold and hard touched his right ear. He did not move his head. He knew that some one was holding a gun. "What do you want?" he called back.

"Stop!" It was a soft feminine voice, but very firm.

"The female of the species!" he ejaculated, bringing the car to an abrupt stop.

"Turn around and drive back to 220 Broadway," commanded the voice.

"On the way!" called Harkins cheerily. "Anything else, ma'am?"

No answer, but the nothing cold and hard still irritated his ear. He hoped she knew what she was about—he didn't; but he obediently swung the car about and headed for his office. He had a great respect for firearms; he had served in France and he knew how short tempered a gun could be. At Columbus Circle he stopped.

"I'm going to look around," he announced.

The gun left his ear, but when he stiffly turned his aching neck he found the rear of the car in shadow and only the gleam of the still menacing weapon.

"Turn Around and Drive Back."

"Miss Hold-Up, put down that gun or I shall call a policeman," he threatened.

"You? Call an officer?" She was contemptuous. "Drive on, please, before I turn you over to the police for stealing my car."

"Your car?" he blurted, but the policeman's whistle ordered them to move with the traffic. "Your car?" he repeated over his soulder.

"Certainly, or my father's car. You are very daring—but please go back to 220 Broadway."

In amazed silence he did drive back to the office building, but it was dark and deserted save for scattered lights.

"What shall I do now?" he asked patiently.

There was a silence, then in a wavering voice she answered helplessly. "I don't know! I never arrested a man before!"

"Neither have I," he confessed, "but perhaps this officer on the corner can straighten things out."

Patrolman Ditty listened to their tales. The girl spoke in a low, cultivated voice, saying that she had driven the car downtown that afternoon to her father's office, had locked it with the safety device and taken the elevator to his private office. Finding him in conference with a client she had gone back to the car, settled herself in the tonneau and in the gloom of the raised top had napped a little. "I woke up out on the Parkway," she ended, "and so I groped and found the place where my father keeps his pistol—and I made the thief turn and drive back here."

"See your license, miss," growled the officer.

She produced it and also repeated the car number.

The officer poked around the machine with a searchlight. "Wrong dope on that miss," he came back to report. "This is the same make but a different number. Now, young feller," he growled at Harkins.

"Something funny about this," he decided presently. "Think I'll lock you up, young man." He took the girl's name and address, put her in a taxicab and then commanded Harkins to drive to the police station.

"Why did you let the girl go?" asked Harkins, peevishly. "She had my car."

"She's J. B. Porter's daughter—she's all right."

Harkins slid down in his seat and smiled feebly. "Show me how to get to Mulberry street," he said humbly. At the station house he was permitted to use a telephone.

"Nervy guy," muttered Patrolman Ditty, as he went back to his beat, after making his report.

Harkins had called J. B. Porter's New Jersey home, but the lawyer was not there. "One of the family will do," he said, but he was advised to call later. This he did and a clear, sweet voice responded: "I am sorry, but my father is not at home. Any message—?"

"This is Harkins, Mr. Porter's legal associate. I am in the Tombs."

"The Tombs?" she gasped. "I am so sorry."

"Thank you," he grinned into the transmitter. "My automobile was stolen—or taken by mistake and here I am!"

"Oh! How strange—you were arrested because some one stole your car?"

"Well—she said my car was her car—and with the evidence all against her she got away," he sighed deeply.

"Got away?" came the faint echo.

"Because she mentioned her father's name—and—they won't let me talk any more—say I'm talking too much."

"Coming right over," he heard before an officer elbowed him away from the instrument.

"Who do you think you are? A guest of the city—walking into jail as if you owned the whole shootin' match!" growled the policeman.

"Must own some of it—taxpayer—guest of the city! I rather like that," chuckled Harkins. "Can I stay down here—somebody coming along to bail me out?"

Then came J. B. Porter, shaking with laughter, and a lovely girl who clung to her father and begged Harkins' forgiveness for her blunder. J. B. Porter bailed his future son-in-law (none of them knew the fact just then) out of jail, and all went happily thereafter.

Harkins says the pleasantest hours of his life were spent in the Tombs' prison, and as for a bachelor home in Westchester—why, a New Jersey home, a log fire, two easy chairs and no book at all is much to be preferred.

YANKEES SHOW SPEED

Beat World in Launching Merchant Ships in 1920.

Total World Launchings Show Decrease of Almost 1,900,000 From the 1919 Figure.

New York.—The United States led the world in the total gross tons of merchant vessels launched in 1920, according to figures made public by Lloyd's Register of Shipping.

The total launchings in shipyards of the world amounted to 5,881,000 gross tons, a decrease of almost 1,900,000 from the 1919 figure, but an increase of more than 400,000 over 1918. The total for the United States was 2,476,000 tons, while Great Britain was second with 2,056,000 tons. Japan launched 456,000 tons last year, a decrease from 611,000 tons in 1919.

Lloyd's points out that at the beginning of 1920 the United States and Great Britain had on hand practically the same amount of construction to be completed and credits American yards with greater speed than those in Great Britain, in that this country exceeded England's total by 20 per cent.

The decline in the total world tonnage launched was attributed to the decline in the American shipbuilding program, America's launchings being 1,600,000 tons less than in the previous year.

British production showed a gain of more than 400,000 tons. Other countries launched a total of about 1,330,000 tons during 1920, or about 20,000 tons less than in 1919.

In comparison with pre-war figures the launchings in the United States were nine times as great as in 1913, and throughout the world there was a gain of about 75 per cent. For the first time since the beginning of the war Great Britain last year exceeded its 1913 figure, the gain being about 7 per cent.

Considerable gains over 1919 were shown by France, which increased the total of its launchings from 82,000 tons to 93,000 tons last year; Holland, from 137,000 tons to 168,000 tons, and Italy, from 82,000 tons to 138,000 tons.

Comparative figures were compiled by the registry showing the yearly outputs of Great Britain and America since 1913. Until 1918 Great Britain was in the lead in ship construction, when the United States jumped ahead with 3,083,000 gross tons, against 1,348,000 for Great Britain. Again in 1919 the United States produced 4,075,000 gross tons, against 1,620,000 for England.

Caterpillar Immune to Most Deadly Germs

You can't kill a caterpillar unless you step on it and so cut short its healthy life.

Caterpillars are immune to the bacilli of diphtheria, tetanus and hydrophobia. When inoculated with the consumption bacilli they eliminate them from the system in two or three days. There is a substance in the internal system of the caterpillar that makes it immune to the most dangerous germs.

Having discovered this fact, a French scientist is devoting his life to the study of the caterpillar, hoping to find the antitoxin that so successfully combats disease.

SHE WANTS UNWANTED BABES

Texas Woman's Basket on Steps Receives Four Homeless Infants Within Week.

Dallas, Tex.—Mrs. M. L. Leonard placed a small basket, lined with downy blankets, on her doorstep a week ago and announced through Dallas newspapers that the basket would be kept there to receive homeless and unwanted babies. The other morning she took from the basket a ten-pound boy—the fourth baby to find a haven there this week.

"I do not know where they came from, and I do not want to know," Mrs. Leonard said. "But I do know that from now on they will be well taken care of and that they will be appreciated."

PREDICTS GLASS AUTO ROADS

Englishman Declares That Five Years Hence Speed of Autos Will Equal That of Railroad Trains.

London.—"Five years hence there will be 2,000,000 motor vehicles in England instead of 750,000 as at present," said Lord Montague at a meeting of the Institute of Transport.

He said the width of many of the most used roads would have to be doubled, that roads would be built of semipermanent materials like concrete or glass and that the average speed of autos would equal that of railroad trains.

HISTORIC RELIC IS FOUND

Plan to Move Home of Doctor Priestley, Discoverer of Oxygen, Is Abandoned.

Northumberland, Pa.—That the homestead of Dr. Joseph W. Priestley, discoverer of oxygen, is to remain one of the landmarks of the borough is the prospect, information received from State college says.

The property was bought two years ago by Doctor Pond, then head of the science department of the school. His plan was to have it removed to the campus at State college and there have it stand as a memorial to Doctor Priestley. Since his death, however, nothing has been done in the matter of tearing down the historic building.

Engineers who inspected the building with regard to the feasibility of removing it to State college doubt that it could be done, because of the age of the structure.

Newark, N. J.—The body of Samuel Collins, seventy-five, who died virtually penniless in a hospital here from pneumonia, will be placed in a $10,000 mausoleum at Stroudsburg, Pa., which he built for himself and members of his family years ago.

Frederick Kerr, a local art dealer, said Mr. Collins formerly was a leading art dealer and broker, and at one time had been engaged by J. P. Morgan to collect works of art. During his career, Mr. Collins handled art transactions involving nearly $5,000,000, Kerr said.

In a furnished room occupied by Collins was a bank book showing a balance of 87 cents. Collins' body remained unclaimed at the morgue several days.

3,473,466 JOBS LOST IN YEAR

United States Department of Labor Makes Survey of Employment Conditions.

INDUSTRIES HAVE SLOWED UP

Figures Represent Reduction of 36.5 Per Cent in Employment—Largest Percentage of Reduction in Automobiles and Accessories.

Washington.—American industries on January 1 employed 3,473,466 fewer workers than they did in January a year ago, so the United States Department of Labor announced. The figures were based upon a nation-wide survey of unemployment conditions made by a staff of experts between December 15, 1920, and January 15.

The figures represent a reduction of 36.5 per cent in employment. In other words the industrial plant at New Year's was operating at about 64.5 per cent of the stride it was hitting a year ago. This approximates the "two-thirds of capacity" estimate which experts have been making for some weeks past.

Director John B. Densmore explains that the 3,473,466 figure does not necessarily denote the actual number of the jobless in industry, as some may have been absorbed in pursuits not covered by the inquiry. Other officials pointed out, too, that the "army of the unemployed" is greater than the figures given as gainful pursuits outside of industry were not embraced by the survey—it does not cover clerks, stenographers and other white-collar occupations or casual pursuits in which the slump has been hard felt.

The survey says comparative information from 35 states and the District of Columbia shows that a year ago the number employed in industry was 9,402,000. On January 1 this year it stood at 6,070,648, a reduction of 3,331,352. In addition, unemployment in the other 13 states ran the total to 3,473,466.

Michigan Hardest Hit.

Michigan is shown to be the hardest hit. The working force in the plants is reduced 62 per cent from one year ago. Of the other big industrial states, Indiana and Ohio come next, with a cut of one-half. Illinois is fourth, 44 per cent below a year ago.

By industrial groups, the largest percentage of reduction as compared with a year ago occurred in automobiles and accessories, which indicated a 69 per cent drop in employment. This industry a year ago employed about 8 per cent of the total number in all industry. Second comes the building trades with a reduction of 52 per cent. Twelve months ago these crafts employed about 11 per cent of all workers in industry. Next comes textiles and clothing, hosiery and underwear, with a curtail of 35½ per cent in employment; leather, boots and shoes, with a 35 per cent reduction; lumber, furniture, boxes and wood products, 32 per cent below last year; metals, machinery, electric goods and foundry products, 30½ per cent off; clay, glass, cement and stone, 19 per cent off; packing and food products, 19 per cent below last January.

Jobless by Cities.

In 183 industrial cities the estimated employment in industry was placed at 1,802,755. Numerically New York led the cities in volume of unemployment. It was placed at 234,248. Detroit had a reduction in working force of 160,000.

Chicago's number of jobless in industry was given as 86,000. The Indiana Harbor district has 20,000. Cleveland has 31,000 fewer men in the shops, Philadelphia, 70,000; Baltimore, 30,000.

By industrial groups the fall in employment is given:

| | No. unemployed. |
|---|---|
| Metals and products | 833,984 |
| Building trades | 559,250 |
| Packing and food products | 210,480 |
| Textiles and kindred lines | 644,510 |
| Leather and products | 146,278 |
| Automobiles and accessories | 539,972 |
| Lumber and products | 294,653 |
| Clay products, etc. | 104,166 |
| Total | 3,331,353 |
| States not embraced | 142,114 |
| Grand total | 3,473,466 |

Fly Wheel Proves Name in Trip Over Housetops

Rochester. — A large fly wheel in a boiling outfit used by the Pavilion Natural Gas company in that place broke loose from the machine and flew over three houses and crashed through Miss Helen Elwell's dining room window. The wheel in its flight of 80 rods shattered the window to splinters, destroyed many flowering plants thereon and smashed part of the furniture of one room. Miss Elwell was in the kitchen and suffered no injury.

POLICE WORK MADE SCIENCE

Every Policeman in California University Town Is an Expert in Some Line.

SEEKS TO PREVENT CRIME

Each Patrolman in Berkeley Has Motor Car—Entire Force Could Be Concentrated in One Place in Five Minutes.

Berkeley, Cal.—Policing a city as a science, where every policeman is more or less a specialist in some line, where the prevention of crime is made a study, where every effort is made to use the latest and most modern methods in preventing and combating crime, and where there is an unusually friendly relation between the police and the general public, are some of the distinguishing features of the police department of Berkeley, Cal. This city, in which is located the University of California, the largest student body in the world, has perfected a system of policing regarded by experts to be nearly perfect.

Proud of Police.

Pride in the work of its police is the boast of every citizen of this California city. In forwarding the efficiency of the department every policeman is provided with an automobile, that is a combination police machine, ambulance and fire apparatus. Each patrolman is qualified as a first aid man.

Through the use of signal lights and police horns, this department of 32 men, handling a population of 60,000 persons, covering an area of nine square miles, patrols every street and section of the city, day and night. No man patrolling a beat is at any time more than a minute away from communication with the station, and the entire force could be concentrated at the extreme limits of the city within five minutes.

Beggars Are Barred.

Through the method applied by the police department and the ordinances passed by the city, beggars have been barred from the municipality and the soliciting of alms by the fake cripple has been virtually eradicated. Gambling has been reduced to a minimum.

One feature that has attracted unusual attention to the department is the mapping of crimes. By a pin with colored beads, which indicate the nature of the offense, the location is marked on the map. This quickly indicates where the most serious crimes are committed. A general map shows all the complaints. Another shows the bad boys of the community. Still another shows the hours of the day on which crimes are committed.

Vol. 4. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, February 24, 1921 No. 45

Social Stunts

A surprise party was given Mr. and Mrs. Will Dolder on last Thursday evening by their neighbors and friends on North Burgess Ave. All came with good things to eat and it's safe to say that all present had a good time. The Dolders have just sold and are moving to their farm near Grove City.

One of the most delightful meetings of the year for the Glenwood Home Missionary Society was held at the home of Mrs. Chas. W. Walton, 39 Eldon Ave., Thursday afternoon, Feb. 17. After calling the meeting to order the president, Mrs. Bishop, announced that Mrs. Wm. Kennedy, secretary of our "Mothers' Jewels," would have charge of the devotions. The theme for the devotional service was "Stones of Remembrance." Mrs. Kennedy's reading of the scripture and her splendid talk and explanation of the different "stones" mentioned, together with the singing of some of the old hymns by the Society was both inspiring and helpful. Following a short business meeting the president, in behalf of the Society, welcomed the new members. Twenty joined at this time. Following this Mrs. Clark Elliott sang that beautiful song, "Teach Me to Live." A short pageant had been prepared for this meeting entitled "The Church of All Nations." This was very much enjoyed by all present. Those taking part were: Geraldine Elliott, Italian girl; Thelma Allen, Jewish girl; Ross Glick, Russian boy; Edward Alban, Italian boy; Ralph Hill, Servian boy. Mrs. H. W. Lange, teacher, and Mrs. C. F. Bowman, "The Spirit of Christian America."

A miscellaneous shower, to be sent to the Rebecca McCleskey Home, Boaz, Alabama, was given at this meeting. Articles consisting of towels, wash cloths, bedding, etc., amounted to something over $50.00. Refreshments were served and the social hour was enjoyed by all.

On the afternoon of Friday, February 4th, 1921, a meeting was held at West Broad Street School for the purpose of organizing a Parents-Teachers Association. Short talks were given by Mrs. [illegible] McEwen of Ohio Avenue and Mrs. W. E. Eberle of Eastwood Parents-Teachers Association. An election of officers resulted in the following being elected: Mrs. M. H. Prior, 38 North Terrace as Pres., H. T. 4046; V. Pres., T. A. Jones, N. Ogden Ave.; Miss Judd, principal, will serve as 2nd V. Pres.; Sec'y., Mrs. J. C. Close, 46 N. Burgess, H. T. 2275; Treas., Mr. Harper, N. Terrace; Council, Mrs. Truman and Mrs. Walton.

A very interesting meeting will be held at the school March 11th at 8 o'clock. The meetings will be held the 2nd Friday of each month—alternating them from afternoon to evening. Mrs. Prior, the president has named the following standing committees:

Program — Chairman, Mr. Matson, Mrs. H. R. Gibson, Miss Catherine Sperry, Miss White, Mrs. Matson. Membership—Chairman, Mrs. Woodin, Mrs. Raether, Mrs. T. A. Jones, Mrs. C. J. Randall. Press—Mr. J. C. Close. Visiting — Chairman, Mrs. Hanger, Mrs. Walpole, Mrs. Evan Alban, Mrs. Herron, Mrs. Beckett. Social—Chairman, Mrs. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Nowell, Mr. Prior, Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Vols, Mrs. Schultz, Mr. and Mrs. Fishbaugh, Miss Hicks, Miss Hutt, Mrs. Hamilton ,rMs. Adams.

BUSINESS MANAGER.

"APPRECIATION"

How much better we would each of us feel if we would only stop to appreciate and applaud the splendid way in which we see tasks executed every day by some of our fellow citizens as they go about their duties as public servants. Did you ever stop to consider that it is no simple matter or easy task to drive a street car in such a way that the stops will be made without disturbance to the passengers? Did you ever note how careful and dexterous the motorman must be to start his car without perceptible jar or how watchful he must be to avoid disastrous collisions? How much more cheerful we would be and how much pleasure we would give others, if we should make it a habit of passing a word of appreciation where it is merited instead of the usual word of criticism and fault-finding. Our lives would be enriched because of the habit of looking for beauty instead of ugliness and good instead of evil in a world where one finds what you are looking for. By appreciation, we can best inspire the highest endeavor and the greatest efficiency, for while it enriches the one who gives it, it inspires to better and nobler services, the one who receives it. The failure to register and express appreciation is nothing short of spiritual blindness. We go about our daily tasks with no apparent thought of the All-protecting Providence, and the myriad of comforts and blessings that "hedge us about." Lowell says:

"Daily with souls that cringe and plot
We, Sinais climb and know it not."

And then, how little we appreciate how thousands, yes millions, of our fellow men are working and toiling for our benefit. How dependent we are! And so, when we see a fellow servant rendering an especially fine brand of service, no matter where it may be, let us express our hearty approval.

An incident came under the writer's observation, which, altho it may seem trivial, nevertheless, illustrates the point. It happened on board a sleeper entering the city of Washington one cold winter morning about a year ago. All the passengers were astir, eager to complete their toilet before reaching the capital. As fast as the berths were vacated by their occupants, the porter a lean, sober-faced negro, closed them up. So speedily and dexterously was this work being done, that I stood amazed at the accomplishment. Deft and sure, the hands of this colored man worked with lightning-like rapidity and not a motion was lost. He moved with clock-like precision. The change wrought in the appearance of the car was swift and with no apparent disturbance. The thought occurred to me, what if every one would perform their tasks in as competent a way as this man did? And then it occurred to me that thousands of men and women are daily serving their fellow men in thousands of places and ways, putting their love, in fact, their lives, into their tasks, largely unappreciated. How inter-dependent we are! Let us praise the praise-worthy. It will make the world better. X

PLEADS FOR PEANUT

Yields Milk and Other Foods, Professor Tells House Committee.

In Asking for Protective Duty He Tells of 100 Different Products That Have Been Discovered.

Washington.—More than 100 varieties of products from peanuts, ranging from the purest of milks for the sick room, mothers and infants, to ink useful for writing and sketching, have been discovered by George W. Carver, negro professor of Tuskegee institute.

He showed them to the ways and means committee of the house, and delivered a discourse on them that was greeted with applause from the members and spectators—the first demonstration of the sort that the tariff hearings have known.

Chairman Fordney told him he had made a valuable contribution to science and Representative Garner (Dem.), Texas, a member for 18 years, declared the negro had made the most wonderful exhibition he had ever known to be presented the committee.

Professor Carver is fifty-two years old, and the son of ex-slaves. He was born in Diamond, Mo., and his education began at the age of fifteen years. His high school training was received in Minneapolis. He is a graduate of Iowa Agricultural college, with the degrees of A. B. and A. M., and was a student for six years of former Secretary of Agriculture Wilson. He has declined degrees of D. D. and Ph. D. He is now head of the research and experiment station of Tuskegee.

His discoveries exhibited include ten kinds of milk, five kinds of punches—cherry, lemon, orange, blackberry, and plum; salted peanuts; two grades of flour; two grades of meal; five breakfast foods; new flavorings for ice cream, cakes, gingerbread, cookies and various confections; chocolate-coated peanuts; peanut candy bars; crystallized peanuts; three relishes; nine wood stains, ranging from malachite green to fumed golden oak; black ink; face powder and face cream; Worcestershire sauce; four kinds of stock foods, including a hay composition made from the vine; ground hay with peanut cake; and a sweet food with Chinaberry added as a tonic, and various kinds of oils.

While he did not go into the other investigations he has made, he stated that thus far he has discovered 17 products that can be made from sweet potatoes. "Products from peanuts already discovered will go far ahead. I have not shown you one-half the peanut products. My work with them has just begun."

He said the flavoring extract obtained from the peanuts could be used as a base for any number of flavors and he mentioned strawberries, lemon and vanilla, in addition to those he showed the committee.

Professor Carver appeared under the auspices of the United Peanut Association of America, which is asking for a protective duty against peanuts.

CHEERFULNESS AT THE TABLE

Last Place in the World Where There Should Be Bickerings or Long Faces

A cheerful company at table raises your spirits, animates you and puts you into a more favorable physical condition. Also, I agree with the theory that pleasant subjects only should be discussed at meal. If father sits down to dinner with a hard luck story of bills that are heavy and a purse that is light, of business acquaintances that fail to keep their appointments, of the lowering financial sky, and he doesn't "know what we're coming to, really" that dinner is pretty well spoiled for mother, at least, and what she does take fails to nourish her.

I have wondered if the gayety of their company did not help the people of the Middle ages to survive the horrible messes they used to eat. At the castle everybody sat down to table at once. At the head sat my lord and my lady, their family and noble guests, eating off gold and silver plates. Further down were folk who happened to stop in for the night, perhaps a wandering monk or two, pilgrims, young men in search of adventure, and lower down the servants and retainers. They took their own good time at table with stories, songs and gay laughter, interspersed by tinkling music from the harpist, who warmed himself meanwhile at the huge fireplace. And they enjoyed such dishes as pork and hens ground to powder, boiled with eggs and bread crumbs, ginger, sugar, salt and saffron!—Marion Holmes in Chicago Daily News.

Hold Grudge Against Chameleon.

No African native will have anything to do with a chameleon, under any circumstances whatever. It seems that beyond the dim veils of time, and when the "Great Ancestor" was forming the world, he sent the chameleon to tell the black people that for them life should be immortal, and then, having changed his mind, he sent the lizard to catch up with the chameleon, and, if the message had not already been delivered, to rescind the order.

The legend goes on to relate how the chameleon in its vanity stopped often to change its color, and that, having turned its coat to match its background, it was passed by the lizard, which, arriving first, told the black people that immortality was not for them.

Odd Insurance Policy.

The announcement was made in English papers the other day that a Yorkshireman had taken out an insurance policy against the laying violent hands on his mother-in-law! It appears that the old lady was so frightened of personal injury at the hands of her son-in-law that she made a will leaving him a substantial legacy, if only he would keep his hands off her. Being equally afraid of his ability to hold his temper in check over what might prove a considerable number of years, he went to a firm of underwriters and fixed up an insurance policy covering this queer risk.

Superior Apologist.

"You are not keeping step to the music."

"I know it," replied Mr. Hibrow. "I thoroughly disapprove of jazz and refuse to listen."

PUTS TRANSMITTERS ON CRIB

Baby's Cries Will Now Be Carried to Dad's Ear in the Wee Small Hours

Portland, Ore.—P. A. Curry of Baker has come to the aid of neglected infants.

Curry takes his parenthood with a certain sense of responsibility. Curry Junior's biggest source of complaint is the fact that on several occasions he has had to do without company in the wee small hours because his cries were unheard by his sire.

So Curry, Sr., plans to install three voice transmitters over the infant's bed connecting with a receiver over that of his father.

In the future Curry will be awakened by a great shout every time his infant charge sees fit to announce his awakening.

St. Nicholas Doll.

Russia in the old days had its own type of doll, namely, the St. Nicholas doll. There the Christmas holiday is celebrated 11 days after the celebration in other countries, in accordance with the calendar of the Greek Catholic church.

The St. Nicholas doll was clad almost always in woolly white material and sported fierce mustachios and whiskers. He represented the patron saint of the children, who punished or rewarded by the amount of gifts he bestowed.

Moon and Mountain

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Helen Morrison had come to the Berkshires as traveling companion to an elderly and very wealthy invalid who took the trip each autmun as regularly as she tore off the September sheet from the [illegible].

Inasmuch as Helen was eighteen and her employer was eighty, the young girl found herself, at most times, desperately lonely. The chauffeur who drove the big limousine in which they traveled day after day along some of the most wonderfully lovely roads Helen had ever dreamed of, was as nearly a machine as the motor he was running.

He spoke of nothing but speeds and spark plugs, batteries and bearings. Helen was sure it was a carbureter that kept his body and soul joined together during this earthly span. And how could even a desperately lonely girl chum with a man so mechanically inclined?

"Oh," she wrote home, "to be in this gloriously romantic country, in these moonlit mountain paths without so much as a human being to talk with! One of my companions is eighty and dozing continually. The other is a machine running according to a speedometer. I'm afraid if I had an even ordinarily attractive male person anywhere near me I should forget that I had such a thing as a brake!"

The party stopped for the night in a mountain town that lay in a beautiful valley with hills climbing up on every side and a river flowing between the two states. Helen's employer retired after she had partaken of the simple country suppe. the hotel offered. Helen, lonely, homesick, wandered to the veranda just in time to see the chauffeur starting out for the garage to put up the car for the night.

"Hawkins," she called, almost without thinking what she was about to do, "where are you going?"

"To put up the car, Miss Morrison. Do you want something?"

"N—no. That is, I think I'll go with you, just by way of diversion. Madam is asleep and will not need me." Helen stepped inside the big car and the astonished chauffeur closed the door and took his seat.

"I'll walk home alone, Hawkins," she said when the man opened the door for her again after they had reached the inside of the big garage where there seemed to be many touring cars put up for the night.

"You know the way, Miss?" Hawkins asked.

Helen was sure that she did, and with a short good night she found her way out to the street.

As she was leaving the garage a car bearing an Iowa license was about to enter. Helen stopped short and looked the driver squarely in the eyes.

"George!" she cried. "George Taylor!"

The young fellow stopped his car and jumped out to grasp Helen's two hands.

"Helen, however in this world did you happen to be here—in Brattleboro, Vt.?"

"I have a job—I'm traveling companion to rich Mrs. Easely—don't you remember her?"

"I can't remember anything—anyone—but you, Helen, at this moment," the young man announced very firmly. "Won't you come out for a drive and tell me all about it?"

"But—but you were putting up your car, weren't you?" asked Helen. "I was, yes. But my family has gone to roost and I didn't want to drive alone. Will you come?"

Helen demurred for a moment, and then, after returning to the garage to leave a message with Ha...kins, who did not seem to listen to her, since he was absorbed in the explanation of the use of a carbon remover, she decided to go.

George Taylor had made this trip more than once with his people, and he was surprisingly familiar with the beautiful mountain roads about Brattleboro. He and Helen explained to each other in the course of an hour just how they happened to find themselves so far apart during the summer. There had been another girl at college, and there had been another man at home, and they had missed each other more than either of them had realized till Helen's eyes caught sight of the familiar home-town automobile license.

"We are going on to Williamstown, and then round about and back by the Mohawk Trail, George," Helen was saying when George stopped the car beside an exquisitely moonlit view of mountain and river.

He turned squarely toward her, now that he was relieved of the responsibility of guilding the car. "You were saying——"

"Oh, George, weren't you listening?" Helen asked, a little confused by his direct gaze and constantly increasing [illegible].

"I cannot hear for the beating of my own heart, dear. And what is more, I don't intend to listen to anything but one sentence—do you love me?"

Helen did not answer. He put his arm about her shoulders and lifted her face so that the moon shone full into her eyes. "Tell me, Helen. I cannot wait any longer. I must know. I have been seeing your face in all the mountains, in all the pools, in all the skies, day and night."

"I—I don't like to tell you—way up here so—so far from home, George. It is so strange."

"Love is strange, dear. Do you love me?"

Helen nodded. "Yes—I'm afraid I do. I suspect that was why I was so desperately lonely in all this wonderfully romantic country—because I was longing for you to—to love me."

After a while the car with the Iowa license found its way back to the garage guided by hands that trembled with emotion. And in more than one mountain town, during the remainder of the trip through the mountains, the two parties happened to find themselves staying at the same hotels. Neither was the little companion lonely; neither did she care if the chauffeur thought only of cord tires and cylinder oils. She had promised to marry George Taylor at the end of the journey.

ENVY AND JEALOUSY

Two neighbors living on opposite sides of a popular drive were very envious and jealous of each other, hence their names. If one built a new fence of fancy design the other tried to build a fence of a more modern design, and so on the same line they vied with each other in the barns, garages and in setting of trees, shrubbery, etc., and thus they worried each other for years.

One of them felt that he must in the not distant future pay the last debt, by his death, and thought the next investment should be in a monument of a design that should be superior to any in the cemetery and that could not be equaled or excelled by any one. He had inscribed his name in fancy letters, and then this statement added: "Snug as a bug in a rug."

ENVY.

The other not be to outdone erected on the lot opposite, a monument more massive, with more artistic carving, and finer lettering, etc., with this added inscription: "This bugger is snugger than that other bugger."

JEALOUSY.

CAVES OF WONDROUS BEAUTY

These Known as "Marble Halls," in Josephine County, Oregon, Are Marvelous Formations.

Four limestone caves in various parts of the country have been set aside as national monuments, the most beautiful of all being the Oregon caves, known as "Marble Halls," in Josephine county, Oregon.

Imagine an underground chamber of the most beautifully chiseled limestone formations with a ceiling 200 feet in height! An entire mountain 6,000 feet high seems entirely honeycombed with these beautiful galleries.

The main openings are at an elevation of 4,000 feet, but other openings are scattered over the entire mountain side of five or six miles.

The wonderful stalactites and stalagmite formations of the caves and passageways give to the appearance of a strange fairyland. The actual extent of these wonderful galleries is unknown.

Hundreds of passageways lead in all directions which have never been explored. Streams of water are found at all elevations, and in places larger streams can be heard plunging into bottomless pits. Currents of wind are found in certain passages that will immediately extinguish an open light, no doubt caused by the rush of water.

It is impossible to describe the contrasting beauty of the formations.—Chicago Journal.

Wood in Bowling.

Wood supplies the principal apparatus for playing a number of games where rolling balls have a part to perform, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington. The bowling alley is well known. The specially made floor of the alley is generally of maple or of longleaf pine. Lignum-vitae is regarded as the best wood for bowling balls. It possesses the requisite weight and is exceedingly hard and tough. The pins are generally of maple. This is sufficiently hard to stand much pounding, and no other of equal cost is so satisfactory.

Classifying It.

"I hear they penalize bachelors in France."

"How do they classify the impost?"

"Luxury tax."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Song Values.

The value of songs, in most instances, lies with the artist, the interpreter, because it is the artist who gives a song life and reality.

It is very interesting to observe the various songs spoken of by artists as beautiful, dramatic, thrilling and so on. Each one has an entirely different idea as to value. One will select a song because it happens to suit whichever voice his happens to be. Another will choose a song for the beauty of the lyric, while someone else makes a selection because of the strikingly melodic theme. Others like a song of weird exotic harmonizations or because of original character of form.

When it comes to the subject some prefer sea songs, others dramatic or timely war songs of the declamatory style, while people with diffefent natures lean toward mood or atmospheric songs.

Sam: What kind ob shine do moss of your patrons use? Sunshine.

What is it? Four stiff standers, four limber hangers, two lookers, two hookers and a slash about? A cow.

Why is an American like the eagle? Because he is always found where there is a dollar.

Why is old news like an exploded fire cracker? Because nobody wants it.

Which is the smallest bridge in the world? The bridge of your nose.

A staunch old Quaker, being disgusted with the usual long epitaphs, desired to be brief and asked that his be written:

"Henry Long," with the words, "I still live," underneath.

His friend also wrote his epitaph but he regarded the Scriptural text of his friend as lacking in truth, so he had his written: "James Maguire. Dead and I owns up to it."

Little Story That's True

A SOLDIER'S VIEW

This story was related to me by a friend and I repeat it to illustrate a certain view that is being more or less held these days in regard to Christian religion and also if possible to correct an erroneous conception of the Christian faith.

Tom Christian, a hardy American lad, had enlisted in the signal corps of the A. E. F. It matters not what company or battalion. At any rate, he found himself and company engaged in the fight in the very front ranks during those soul-trying days in the Argonne, then the newly trained American army "was being tried as never before." The call came for volunteers in Tom Christian's company to go into a section which was under heavy bombardment to establish communications. To go on this particular errand meant almost certain death. Tom, together with a few of his companions volnteered and were about to start on their mission, when they were accosted by the Chaplain who addressed them in something of this manner: "You boys are going upon a most hazardous assignment. And some of you, maybe none of you, will ever come back. Don't you think you should make your peace with God?" This talk, though uttered in the best of intentions and with a hope that reconciliation would take place between them and their God, struck a very discordant note in the breast of Tom Christian. He resented the implication that he lacked courage to face death. He did not like to think that Jesus Christ is a fire-escape. He felt intuitively that it was the mark of a craven and a quitter to throw his hitherto worthless life at the feet of Christ at the first sign of danger. It somehow lacked courage, and he wanted to be at least courageous in the face of danger at least when he was in the right.

His little company went forward into the region of death and destruction. He saw men falling right and left. His companions were killed or fatally injured. They died around him like flies, some for want of medical attention, but he was miraculously spared. Probably the most pathetic thing of it all was the great misconception Tom and his companions had of the Christian appeal. Christ does not want us to accept him because we fear him or fear death but because we love him and love the things he stands for. How different might have been their attitude, in moving forward to the fight, had they conceived the faith that they were comrades with Christ in the never ending battle for right and they were peculiarly near to him in fighting in the defense of human liberty and the rights of mankind. And whatever came to pass, they would enjoy His care and protection because they were in harmony with Him and his kingdom. They would have seen in this war, a war against all war. They would see themselves crusaders fighting to make all future wars practically impossible. They would see that in crushing the sinister forces that planned and perpetuated this war, they were in reality crushing the enemies of Christ and mankind? Christ calls to a militant Christianity for He said "If ye love me you will keep my commandments," and that can only mean to love your fellowmen and oppose all forces of greed, hypocrisy, and tyranny that tend toward his destruction. This is the kind of a conception that ought to appeal to Tom Christian and his kind.

Say, Mary, I noticed a statement in the Hilltop Record about what is termed a great nerve and blood remedy. Do you know anything about it?

Yes, Mrs. Brown, I know it to be a great medicine.

Let me tell you something, it is the prescription of a very talented physician, who was familiar with the curative qualities of plants, roots and barks that grew in his native hill country on the Ohio. After his medical training in the schools of Ohio and New York, he arranged the formula known as Ke-O-Ka. But, Mary, what is Ke-O-Ka?

Answer—The formula is no secret. First, there is no opiate in it. It contains eight (8) of the best blood remedies known, such as wild cherry, bloodroot, yellow dock, etc.

But, what will it do?

It removes lumps and swellings.

It removed a lump the size of a hen's egg, from the side of a woman's face, this, mind you, when other remedies had failed. I know several persons, who had the trouble known as goitre, who have had the enlarged condition removed by it.

You no doubt know Mr. Morris, on North Warren avenue. He can tell a story of its power, as a system builder, that ought to interest every individual on the Hilltop. He went from an invalid's chair to a 10-hour day in the work shop.

There is nothing on the market like Ke-O-Ka. Now is the time and every body should use this great blood remedy. Further information given if you will call Hilltop 2866.

GIANT X-RAY TO TREAT CANCER

Important Discovery Is Made by Professor at Harvard University.

HAS ADVANTAGE OVER RADIUM

Experiments in University Laboratory Make It Possible to Produce X-Rays of More Penetrating Power Than Ever Before.

Cambridge, Mass. — Discoveries made by William Duane, professor of biophysics at Harvard, working in collaboration with research students of physics, have made it possible, according to Harvard physicists, to secure X-rays of more penetrating quality than have ever before been obtained in this country and these new rays are now to be used for the first time in America for the alleviation of cancer.

While it is emphatically stated by Professor Duane that neither X-rays nor radium should be considered a permanent cure for all kinds of cancer, it has long been known that radium has a marked alleviative effect upon this disease.

The Harvard cancer commission is erecting a new building adjoining the Collis P. Huntington hospital in Boston, where an X-ray plant will be installed, as well as the commission's radium plant.

What Discovery Means.

The significance of the discovery was explained in the following statement at Harvard:

"The advantage of X-rays over radium is that the latter is scarce and immensely expensive, costing at present more than $100,000 a gram, and can, therefore, only be used in small quantities. If X-rays were used it would be possible to make the rays enormously more powerful than has been possible with the limited amount of radium available.

"The trouble with the use of X-rays up to this time has been that they are not as penetrating as the so-called Gamma rays of radium and the problem of the Harvard physicists has been to secure this needed quality.

"It was known that to secure penetration it was necessary to secure a high frequency of vibration. The Harvard physicists, after many experiments, found that a physical law known as the 'quantum law' applied to the X-ray spectrum, and discovered that they could increase the frequency of the rays and thus their penetration, by increasing the voltage of current used in the X-ray tube.

Gets Enough Voltage.

"Professor Duane reports that the tube goes to pieces under a voltage of more than 150,000 volts, but that a sufficiently high voltage has been obtained to make the X-rays very nearly as effective for certain medical purposes as the Gamma rays of radium.

"Long continued exposure to X-rays is so dangerous to the operator that the greatest pains have to be taken to protect him from them. In the Jefferson physical laboratory at Harvard, where Professor Duane makes his experiments, the X-ray plant is kept in a room by itself and the rays are sent out through a minute slit in the wall. The brick wall at this point is reinforced with lead and a lead screen is placed across the door. Many experimentors in various places have been killed or seriously injured by constant use of X-rays."

BRITISH MASONRY GROWING

Report of United Grand Lodge Shows Big Increase of Lodges in 1920.

London.—Three times as many Masonic lodges were instituted in 1920 in England and those parts of the dominions where the United Grand Lodge of England has jurisdiction as in any of the previous years, according to a report just made public here. Similar increases were announced by Scottish and Irish Grand Lodges and Chapters.

Freemason's Hall, the craft's London headquarters, has become too small for the demands upon it, and the return from India of the Duke of Connaught, the Grand Master, is awaited for the completion of a big extension scheme including a new Masonic Temple and offices to be erected as a memorial to members who fell in the war.

STOWAWAYS GO TO ENGLAND

Found on Every Cunarder From New York Recently, Say British Mariners.

Southampton, England.—Criminals driven out of New York by the efforts to suppress the crime wave there are fleeing to England as stowaways on British ships, say the British mariners. One captain told a magistrate here that stowaways had been discovered on board all Cunard ships that sailed from New York for England for the last three months.

Eight stowaways found on the liner Imperator on one trip were sentenced to pay a fine of $100 each or serve one month in prison.

MODEST HERO GETS CHECK

Father of Girl Saved From Train Advertises to Find Her Rescuer.

Lynn, Mass.—Out of w[illegible] for eight months, Clarence Robert Hughes, a World war veteran with a wife and two children, received a check for $300 from Edward Watson, a retired leather manufacturer of Dorchester whose daughter Hughes saved from being crushed under a train.

"I had almost forgotten the incident until I received the check," said the rescuer, who was so modest that his identity was only learned through advertising in the newspapers.

Hughes was talking to a friend on the platform of the Lynn railroad station, when Mildred Watson, a fifteen-year-old schoolgirl, started across the tracks. As a train approached she fell between the rails. With the locomotive only a few feet from the girl, Hughes pulled her to safety.

Pennsylvania Surgeon Removes Own Appendix

Kane, Pa.—That he might exemplify in his own case that dangerous anesthetics were not necessary in an operation for the removal of the appendix, Dr. Evan O'Neil Kane, sixty, one of the most noted surgeons of this state, calmly sat upon an operating table and cut out his own appendix, while doctors and nurses stood by and watched. He applied only a local anesthetic.

British Smoking Less.

London.—There has been a marked reduction in the retail sale of champagne and cigars in England. Cigar merchants say that recent clearances from bond and importations from Cuba have practically been suspended. The public, it is stated, refuse to buy at the high prices necessitated by the heavy duty and the inflated cost of tobacco.

INDIAN PLEADS FOR FISH RIGHTS

Aged Chief Recalls Treaty Made With the Governor of Washington in 1855.

CHEERED BY LEGISLATORS

Protests Against Disregard of Pact Which Recognized Right of Indians to Take Salmon in the Yakima River.

Olympia, Wash.—Sixty-six years ago in the spray of Prosser falls, an Indian chief and the then governor of Washington respectively pledged their people to abide by a pact.

This pact recognized the perpetual rights of the Yakima tribe to fish where from time immemorial the red man had taken his salmon.

The Indians had been reluctant, saying to Gov. Isaac I. Stevens, "but when you are dead, who will bear witness to your promises?" And the governor had replied:

"I pledge the Americans to keep the promises as long as the mountains stand, as long as the sun shines and the river runs!"

Calling upon these mute witnesses and summoning the spirits of the dead, Chief Meninock of the Yakimas has just made a speech of protest at the whites' violation of that treaty, in the state senate chamber here, which is the most dramatic recorded in its annals.

Boy When Treaty Was Made.

And that speech, which would do credit to the historic orators of his race, with its sharp challenge to the white man's honor, bids fair to correct a wrong the Indians had hitherto borne in silence.

Meninock was a boy when the treaty was made. He had stood attentively beside his father on that occasion. Today he is 80, and wrinkled. Much water has run over Prosser falls since then, and the salmon have dwindled. Also, the whites have enacted fish and game laws which conflict so with the treaty of 1855 that Meninock was recently arrested for taking salmon from the Yakima river.

A few days ago Chief Meninock and other tribal leaders, together with their wives and children, appeared at the imposing state lodge of the white men at the state capitol here to protest. In their feathered and beaded trappings and scarlet blankets they projected a vivid picture of the past into the busy legislative councils as the chief rose to speak in dignified protest.

Calls Upon Spirits.

"My heart is glad today," said Meninock with solemn mien and sonorous tongue, "because you have said you would listen to what we have to say. It makes me feel that you want to do right by my people whose privileges have been taken and who are sick and sad for being deprived of the food which has given them health and strength.

"I call upon the spirits of the dead and upon those witnesses which Governor Stevens himself invoked to testify that I speak the truth—for the white-topped mountain still stands and the river still runs over the falls where the salmon in season come to leap."

When the old chief sat down among his people the assembled legislators broke into a storm of approving cheers, and the senate committee which has the Indians' case under advisement immediately went on record as favoring the claims of Meninock and his folk, as included in a bill already introduced.

"White men," said the chief as he marched away, "are not so much dishonest as they are sometimes short in memory."

CHARGES 2,933 CASUALTIES

Report Says Japanese Killed or Wounded This Number of Koreans.

Shanghai, China.—The Korean Red Cross in Shanghai has made public a statement charging that Japanese forces killed or injured 2,933 Koreans on Chinese soil in Manchuria from Oct. 9 to Nov. 5 last year. The number of houses and dwellings said to have been destroyed is 1,082, the number of churches burned twenty-five and schools nine. Philip B. Loh, head of the Korean Red Cross, said the record had been compiled in six counties.

DIES TRAGIC DEATH

Diary Tells of Fight for Life in the Frozen North.

Body of Duluth Man Found by Trappers 200 Miles From Nearest Trading Post.

The Pas, Manitoba.—Out of frozen expanses of Barren lands, 200 miles from the nearest trading post, news has just reached the provincial police here of the tragic death of A. O. Rinehart of Duluth, Minn., a trapper.

His body was found in a shack last October by two other trappers. Beside it was a diary which recorded how for months he had fought a solitary and courageous battle against disease, hunger and cold. The last entry was dated April 9, 1920.

Rinehart left The Pas in August 1919, on the long journey into Barren lands for a trap line. During the next three months his life, apparently, was without incident, for the first entry in the diary was dated November, 1919.

Four months later, March, 1920, the trapper's notes revealed his almost helpless plight—helplessly confined to his bed. Realizing his predicament, he had stored all his supplies within reach.

The final chapter told of his inability to get out of bed to keep the fires going, the exhaustion of his water supply, and his slow death.

S. P. McClenaghan, one of the trappers who found Rinehart's body, said the diary showed the doomed man had scorned suicide, and to make sure he would keep his resolve not to end his life he had broken the mechanism of his revolvers and rifles. His notes expressed hopes that someone would come to his rescue.

A letter the dead trapper had written to a relative, Waldo Rinehart of Shawano, Wis., also was found in the cabin.

WORM MAKES SOIL TILLABLE

Earth Would Be Barren Without Them, Says British Professor.

London.—The worm, persecuted, abused and misunderstood, is worthy of consideration, according to Professor J. Arthur Thomson of Aberdeen university, who has just completed a series of lectures on the evolution of life. Professor Thomson says that the worm is one of our earliest ancestors and was the first creature to emerge from the sea with the coming of dry land.

Realizing the great task that lay before them, the worms at once began the custom of moving with one end of the body forward. Plowing beneath the surface of the earth, they turn over the soil for a depth of three inches once every 15 years. Were it not for this natural serrating of the land, trees, plants and grains would not grow, and the earth would be a barren, sandy place unfitted to sustain any form of life.

MEASURE 'CREPE RING'

Observations of Planet Saturn Made by Harvard Astronomer.

Finds That the Inner Ring or "Crepe Ring," as It Is Known to Astronomers, Is 2,000 Miles Thick.

Cambridge, Mass.—The inner ring of the planet Saturn, known to astronomers as the "crepe ring" on account of the fact that it is much less brilliant than the others, has a thickness of 2,000 miles, while the other rings are very much thinner, according to observations made by Prof. William H. Pickering of Harvard at the Harvard Astronomical station at Mandeville, Jamaica.

The thickness of the rings of Saturn is a matter which has long attracted the interest of astronomers. This planet is surrounded by what appears through a small telescope to be a single flat ring of exceeding thinness. Through a larger telescope this is seen to be in reality three concentric rings.

Every sixteen years or so the earth passes through the plane of these rings, which are then in a position edgewise to the earth. So thin are they that for a while they disappear and cannot be seen until the earth moves out of their plane. This phenomenon occurred on November 7 and will occur again on February 22 and August 8 of this year, after which there will be no opportunity of observing it again for sixteen years.

Professor Pickering reports that he observed the rings just before and after the November transit and found the inner ring to be thicker than the others, estimating it to be 2,000 miles thick. He also reports that in the outer edge of the second ring the meteors seem to be more concentrated than elsewhere.

Astronomers believe these rings to be composed of innumerable small meteors revolving in dense swarms about the middle portions of the planet.

Professor Pickering is also engaged in studying the "canals" on the planet Mars and in searching for the still undiscovered planet which is believed to revolve around the sun far outside the orbit of Neptune, the outermost planet yet discovered in the solar system.

Put Dynamite Under Car When It Refused to Move

Ed Meyer, a road builder of Hazelhurst, Miss., cranked and cranked, but the flivver wouldn't go. He became exasperated and finally put 47 sticks of dynamite under it. It went. Spare parts littered the country.

Superstitious negroes, 15 miles away, thought the end of the world had come and held prayer meetings.

Social Stunts

The Annual Queen Esther banquet of the Columbus District was held at the Glenwood M. E. Church Friday evening, March 11th. It was attended by about two hundred and fifteen Queen Esthers and officers of the different Auxiliaries and was a delightful success in every particular. The banquet was provided by the Glenwood Auxiliary and every appointment seemed to be complete. Much credit is due Mrs. J. H. Bishop, president of our Auxiliary and Mrs. M. L. Stevenson and their corps of workers for the splendid menu served and for the decorations. After gathering around the tables the invocation was offered by our pastor's wife, Mrs. C. F. Bowman. Miss Florence Starkey, president of our Senior Queen Esther Circle, presided as toastmistress and in a very gracious manner welcomed the visitors in behalf of the Glenwood Circles.

Mrs. John Offord, District Secretary of Young People called the roll of the Queen Esther Circles in the District and they responded by giving the number of members in their Society and the number present at the banquet. Some of them also gave their yell.

The following is the Glenwood girls' yell:

G-l-e-n-w-o-o-d
That's the way we spell it
Here's the way we yell it
Glenwood! Glenwood!

Mrs. Luella Birch who has been a teacher in the Rebecca McClaskey Home and is now preparing for Field Secretary work talked interestingly for a few minutes.

Miss Kallstedt of Oakland, Cal., who is one of our Field Secretaries of Young People's Work, was the principal speaker of the evening. In a entertaining manner she held her ence for more than an hour, driv- some her truths and lessons to the by relating interesting stories owing Miss Kallstedt's address nior Queen Esther girls gave a but entertaining pageant, en- "The Girl Who Hadn't Time." Those taking part in this were Misses Glick, Merritt, Six, Haas, Mitchell and Walpole.

Following the pageant the Junior Queen Esther Circle gave a processional. As they marched in each girl carrying a lighted candle they sang softly "Savior Like a Shepherd Lead Us." It was a beautiful and impressive sight.

It Surprises Nearly Everyone

to know how little fuss or muss our workmen make when wiring houses for the use of electric light. Almost anybody can run wires. Putting them back of newly papered walls and under finished floors without leaving a trace of the work—is another thing. We have demonstrated our ability to do this many times. You cannot afford to run the risk of fire due to careless or defective wiring. We are not experimenting on your house.

Call us for an estimate.

Stanley Koch, son of Jacob and Mary Patterson Koch, was born in Adelphia, Ross County, May 18, 1874, and died at his home, 175 S. Burgess Ave., Columbus, March 1, 1921, aged 46 years, 9 months and 10 days. Two severe illnesses during infancy weakened his resistance and made more tender the relationship with members of his family. He was always of a shrinking, backward disposition and when old enough to enter school, all who knew him, remember his slipping home and his constant "I will go tomorrow." In spite of numerous attempts, the real start was not made until the younger sister went with him and together they went through to graduation.

He was passionately fond of birds and animals. The home yard and sheds were full of his cats, dogs, pigeons, turtles, tadpoles, stick horses, some with stuffed heads and bright leather bridles—rows of them. In manhood this same trait was shown in his love for children and flowers. When older, he was the same kind, patient boy, always ready to do whatever was asked of him, his backwardness working as a handicap, many times keeping him from success and helpful companionship.

There were mistakes and weaknesses (and who of us have them not) but through them all he lived in the same kind, patient way, with only encouraging words and cheery smiles for all.

In boyhood he joined the M. E. Church of Adelphia. During the pastorate of Rev. Alfred Hughes of Third Ave. M. E. Church of Columbus, he renewed his vows and was again taken into full connection. Later he was transferred by letter to Glenwood Church. At the time of his death, he was happy and successful in his work as money express messenger for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

One of the men working with him said, he was known as the best natured man to work under on the Pennsylvania Lines and that it would have been only a short while until he would have had full charge of a car.

He was married in Adelphia to Miss Eva Banner of Summit Station, July 10, 1906. There remain to regret his early going, his wife and daughter Katherine, one brother, Howard Koch of the Tracy Wells Co., three sisters, Mrs. Josephine Ulery and Mrs. John Whittier of Columbus, and Mrs. Frederick Biglow, wife of the editor of "Good Housekeeping Magazine," six neices and one nephew. Two sisters have preceded him to the spirit world.

We lay away his worn body with loving, tender memories and confident hope of again meeting him freed from the limitations of the flesh.

Miss Nellie Frances Divney, 26, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Divney, died Friday at the home of her parents, 82 S. Warren Ave., after an operation. She leaves her parents, two brothers, James and Raymond Divney, and a sister, Miss Isabelle Divney. Funeral at 8:30 a. m. Monday at St. Aloysius Church. Burial in St. Joseph's Cemetery.

---

I wish to thank our many friends for their kindness, sympathy and beautiful floral offerings, during our bereavement, the death of our dear husband and father.

Mrs. Koch and Katherine.

Miss Robbins and Mrs. Greiser of the School of Music on Midland Ave., with Miss Louise Hauer, returned Monday from a most successful concert tour in the South. They had many flattering press notices while away concerning their work.

The Robbins-Greiner School of Music, under the direction of Miss Edith L. Robbins and Miss Ethel Greiner, announces the opening of a vocal department on March 19th. Miss Louise Hauer, who needs no introduction to the musical circles of Columbus, has been added to the faculty to take charge of this department.

Miss Hauer has studied extensively in Columbus and elsewhere. She has also appeared on numerous occasions at the Deshler concerts and has just returned from a southern tour, where she is said to have captivated her audiences.

"I have decided to marry again, Miss Colburn."

Dr. Willard Cavanaugh, middle-aged, made the remark over the top of his newspaper when Harriet Colburn entered the living room after tucking the doctor's daughter, Thelma, aged six, and his son, Kenneth, aged four, in their beds.

It was somewhat of a surprise to Harriett, for when she left the hospital training school upon her graduation two years ago to accept a position in the doctor's household she had been given to understand the new service would be permanent. It was more than a surprise—it was a shock. For Harriett had come to love the children intrusted to her care.

Harriett was well past the twenty year mark and she was not beautiful. But she was a good, wholesome sort of girl, who took life seriously and paid strict attention to business. Her business was seeing that Thelma and Kenneth had the right food, fresh air, the proper kind of attire and the correct form and amount of discipline.

She had specialized in the care of children and had a way with them that few could hope to rival. Furthermore, she loved any and all members of the coming generation, and for that reason she had declined a tempting institutional offer and welcomed the chance to look after the Cavanaugh family. Before engaging her the doctor had watched Harriett and had become convinced that the salutary welfare of his progeny would be assured in her hands. Yes, the doctor's announcement was disappointment, but Harriett had been taught to control her emotions and was confident her dismay was not manifest when she sank into a chair across from her employer, who laid aside his paper and wiped his glasses.

"I thought I had better speak to you of my intentions some time in advance," he went on, "so that you could look for a [illegible], although I understand you have been the recipient of several flattering offers during your term of service with me."

"That is true," said Harriett modestly. She could have an institutional position at the hospital any time she desired, and there were several places open similar to the one she now occupied.

With her face in the shadow she looked intently at the doctor, whose genial countenance was illuminated by the table lamp. This was the man whose children she loved, and at times she had felt she could go a step farther, if only she would permit it, and care— But, of course, that was out of the question. Harriett was a professional woman, and had long since abandoned all idea of marriage. Still, she was curious to know the name of the fortunate girl.

"You may be sure," the doctor went on, "that I will give you the best of recommendations. Fortunately for me the young lady who has consented to be my wife is also a graduate nurse—or will be shortly—so I feel my children will not suffer materially by the change in conditions."

When Harriett retired she crept to the child[illegible] room and by the light coming [illegible]om the hall with glistening e[illegible]es on the [illegible] healthy faces pres[illegible]ed against t[illegible] lows in two little w[illegible]hite enamele[illegible]

"It's been pretty lonely," he sighed, "but Agatha will cheer things up. She's rather frivol[illegible]s, but that's what I need. There's to[illegible] much serious business in my life. [illegible]gatha will be good to the kiddies, too. I'm sure; probably not so efficient as Miss Colburn, but they need some one who really can be a mother to them."

The next evening Dr. Cavanaugh called at the hospital to take Agatha for an auto spin, knowing it was her "late leave" night. But she was not there.

"Agatha's gone to a dance," said a

Are You Waiting for Rents to Come Down?

Are you one of the millions who are patiently paying rents that are from 20 percent to 50 percent too high?

If you are, do you know the facts?

Do you know that Columbus is short hundreds of homes; that experts estimate the United States to be four years behind in building requirments?

The law of supply and demand always fixes prices. So long as there is a home shortage landlords will demand high rents and tenants will be forced to pay them.

The one way out is to become a home owner your self.

You can build now cheaper than at any time in the past five years, and almost as cheaply, we believe, as at any time in the next five years.

Lumber and building materials have taken a tremendous drop. The complete cessation of building has caught manufacturers with big stocks which they have been forced to sell almost at cost.

If you buy now you can take advantage of their situation. If you wait, you will buy when everyone else is buying, and you will find the increasing demand forcing prices upward.

In our opinion, right now is a good time to build.

You owe it to yourself to investigate thoroughly Call and see our plan book, or a letter or phone call will bring us to you at once.

YANKEE SAILORS EXPERT AT SEA

U. S. Merchant Marine Blessed With Officers and Men Quick to Learn.

CREWS ARE NOT MUTINOUS

Accidents to Ships Growing Fewer Because of Increased Experience—Make Good When Emergencies Arise at Sea.

Rotterdam.—Whatever may be the ultimate fate of the American merchant marine, the American Jack Tar has come back to his own. This is the verdict of constant observers in the shipping department of the United States consulate general at Rotterdam, one of the biggest ports for American ships in Europe, to which come monthly thousands of American merchantmen.

These Yankee ships' officers and sailors, for the most part products of only two or three years of training, have learned to handle their big freighters with all of the skill of the windjammer crews of the old Yankee clipper days. They do not, for the most part, know how to reef a topsail or do any of the hundreds of nautical things for which there were rich-sounding terms in the days of the sailing ships.

There in an Emergency.

But when it comes to piloting a big steamer through a heavy gale, stoking the fires of the coal burners or turning to with a vim at any of the emergency tasks that may develop at sea, the American born, American trained ship's officer or "A. B." (able bodied seaman) in the language of the seamen's resorts on the Schiedamsache dyke here, "won't take nuthin' from nobody."

The big books of the consulate general, in which are recorded the histories of the voyages of these American ships and the complaints of the crews, bear out Jack's contention that he is as able a seaman as any who sails the seven seas.

"These records show," said one of the consular officials, "that American ships' officers are as efficient as British, Dutch or Scandinavians trained long to the sea. They show that the young American sailor can learn his work quickly, that a boy whose nautical experience three years ago was confined to pumping water for the cows on the farm, or bathing in the old swimmin' hole, can adapt himself to his ship as well as a Norwegian lad who has been trawling for fish since he first wore trousers.

Different Now.

"For a short time, because of lack of proper charts and much experience, accidents to American ships seemed much more frequent than to those of other nationalities. Now, this is changing.

"American-born, newly-trained captains have no more trouble with their crews than the masters of ships flying other flags, or masters who have become naturalized Americans in order to get an American ship. In fact, in many cases they have less.

"Not long ago, an American captain who was only 27 years old, brought his tramp freighter all around the world, making money on the voyage, and his crew had not a single complaint to record against him."

STAMP-DUE MAIL RETURNED

Postmasters Instructed to Send Foreign Matter Back If Not Fully Paid.

Washington. — American business concerns and individuals who mail foreign letters without sufficient postage, thereby causing the recipients to pay a penalty double the amount due before they may receive the mail, are offered a remedy by the postoffice department to prevent such negligence.

Complaints reaching the department of commerce through American consular representatives say foreign business concerns and individuals greatly resent having to "buy" their American mail and these have resulted in efforts to prevent the practice.

Postmasters have been notified that all mail destined abroad and which bears printed, written or stamped notation readings "Dispatch only if postage is fully prepaid" or similar direction, shall, if underpaid, be returned to senders for affixing of additional postage stamps required.

BARON GETS EVEN ON NAME

British Authorities Refuse First One, He Takes "Ystwyth of Tan-y-Bwich."

London.—Mr. Vaughan-Davies, member of parliament for Cardiganshire, one of the five recently created peers, has discovered that a mere baron can not select any title he may desire.

He wanted to call himself baron of Cardiganshire, which he has represented in parliament for many years, and so notified the authorities that have charge on such matters.

He was told that he couldn't have it. Nobody under the rank of earl could choose the name of a county or a country town for his title. So he has elected to be known as Baron Ystwyth of Tan-y-Bwich, which nobody but a Welshman knows how to pronounce.

EDITS 1921 "POOR RICHARD"

Department of Agriculture Revives Franklin's Almanac, in Spirit, to Assist Farmer.

Washington.—Uncle Sam has revived Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard," in spirit at least.

Publication of a farmer's almanac, much after the style of Franklin's epigrammatic homilies, to growers was announced by the Department of Agriculture.

"Beware of false prophets," declared one caution. "Don't plant by the moon, but get the best seed and prepare the seed bed, then plant when soil and moisture conditions are right."

"The owner of a scrub bull should have a leather medal—made from the bull's hide," is another.

The book contains seasonal advice on all farm topics and is designed as an index as well to available government publications on any specific subject.

BRITAIN BREAKS SHIP RECORD

Builds 618 Vessels, 2,055,624 Tons, While the United States Shows Falling Off.

London.—All records for the construction of merchant vessels were broken by the yards of Great Britain in 1920, when 618 vessels, of 2,055,624 tons, were completed. The total of 1919 was exceeded by 435,182 tons and the previous record figures of 1913 by 142,371 tons, says Lloyd's Register.

On the other hand, the figures given on the 1920 output of United States yards—500 vessels, of 2,476,253 tons—show a decrease of 1,599,132 tons, compared with 1919, this decrease accounting for over 92 per cent of the total reduction in tonnage launched abroad during 1920.

Bold Robbers Rifle Bank; But It Had Failed

movables on his table, most of which lay scattered on the floor.

Hunter rescued the inkwell just in time, and unceremoniously bundled pussy into a light basket. Then the two set out for Morristown.

No. 34 Ralston place proved to be an attractive house set in the midst of a green, tree-shaded lawn. He walked up the path and rang the bell. A neat, white-capped maid answered his ring, and he was soon in the presence of his imagined "old maid." His expectations were dashed, however, for the owner of the stray, when she entered the room, caused him to spring to his feet with a flush on his face.

He knew that here was the one face he had sought all his life—and he had imagined her old and cranky! This beautiful girl of twenty or so, with light hair curling about a clear face, with the bluest eyes he had ever seen—Hunter found himself stammering something that he felt instinctively was banal.

"But I know you've had a lot of trouble with Skookum." So that was the kitten's name. How adorable she was! The girl, not the kitten, of course.

"No trouble at all," he assured her. "I'm sure that it was a pleasure to—to return it to you."

He laughed deliciously. "That's not very complimentary to Skookum," she replied.

"Oh, but I didn't mean that—at least, not that way." He was fussed—he was distinctly fussed, and getting more so every minute, he thought. If only she wouldn't look at a fellow that way! It was disconcerting, very.

"I—I think I must be going," he stammered.

"Oh, but you must stay and have tea," she cried. "And at least let me know to whom it is that I am obliged."

His wits were returning. "My name's Hunter—Edward Hunter. And I don't want you to feel obliged to me. But if you must, won't you tell me to whom I owe this pleasure?"

She blushed ever so slightly.

"I'm Estelle Easterman," she replied. "I live here all alone with my mother. I'm sure that I'm awfully glad to have met you, Mr. Hunter. And now let's have tea."

They had tea and much talk. And Hunter departed; but not without having extracted an invitation to call again.

* * * * * * *

Some six months later Skookum, vastly improved in stature and disposition, found the house in an unaccountable flutter. His mistress, who had always paid so much attention to him, was dressed all in white, with a long floating veil not at all like her ordinary attire. Skookum tried to play with the veil and was sternly chidden. And there was music, and hundreds of people about the place, none of whom paid the least attention to Skookum.

And presently his mistress walked slowly down the stairs and was met by a man whom Skookum remembered as his one-time benefactor; and a man in black clothes said something, and the other man kissed his mistress, and there was great scurrying and hurrying. Skookum felt very neglected, and was on the point of voicing his feelings when his mistress and the man rushed up to him and caught him in their arms and kissed him and each other indiscriminately.

"He's responsible for it all," said the man. "Bless him!"

"He is, the darling!" said his mistress. "He shall have cream for dinner tonight."

And he did.

The ground was broken Tuesday morning for the foundation of the new Hilltop Church of Christ building, which is soon to be erected on two beautiful lots located on the corner of S. Burgess and Olive St.

This aggressive church was organized in June, 1916, and now has a membership of 160. For the last year and a half they have been raising money to build. The lots are paid for and they have over $5000 in cash and a number of outstanding pledges soon to be paid, among which is one for $1000, by a business man of another city.

The building will be a modern brick Bible School plant which will be large enough for the Sunday School and Church services for the present and will be located on the back of the lots so as to leave room for the erection of an auditorium in front later. The building will cost about $20,000.

The congregation is very happy in the thought that they will soon be located in their new home. For several years they have been meeting in the I. O. O. F. Hall G. B. Orr, Jesse Miller and Frost Bratt are the building committee.

Put in Your Coal

We are asked every day if it is a good time to lay in the winter coal and while we are not prophets and we do not know the future, however it is our candid opinion that there is never so good a time to do this as when coal is plentiful, and is being carefully mined as it is at present.

High grade coal is now available and at a reasonable price.

We know that in a few weeks the lake shipping will again commence, and it will likely stimulate the market, and cause the price to advance a little. Besides it is always desirable to have the muss over before housecleaning.

It is always true, that after a calm there is a rush, and we think the rush is soon due.

For the past five years, March and April have been the best time to put in coal from the standpoint of price, and we find that the preparation is much better when there is not such a rush.

We have some very fine West Virginia coals coming in every day to take care of our early trade.

The Smithers Creek Hand Picked Splint we have been handling for the last eight years. It is a splendid coal, a good burner, holds well, low in ash, makes some soot, but is very economical.

The Buffalo White Ash is also a high grade coal and was once known as the Black Nancy. It is hard, a free burner, low in ash, and not as sooty as the most of the West Virginia coals.

We are also very fortunate in having a few cars of the well known Dundon red ash. This is a coal that everybody wants a second time, makes very few ashes, is lumpy and holds fire well, so everybody praises it.

We have now a car of Pocahontas lump and a car of mine run, both from good mines and of excellent quality.

The Jacksonville Lump is our Hocking brand. This comes from a deep mine and is always well prepared and gives good satisfaction.

Call us for prices and further information.

Hoge Memorial Meetings

Days when the present active congregation of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church was but a "mere handful" of good spirited citizens and worshipped in the little Hoge chapel at 2508 W. Broad St., 15 years ago, were vividly recalled Sunday at the church's anniversary services. Speaking for the members of the chapel pastorate, W. S. Sackett, grandson of Dr. James Hoge, after whom the church was named, gave an interesting recital of the initial work.

Foster Copeland, another member of the congregation, in an address presented the history of the church, while the growth of the Presbyterian Church in Columbus was reviewed by Rev. Dr. W. H. Houston. There are now 17 Presbyterian congregations here, he said.

Music during the services was furnished by the Westgate Masonic chorus, of 35 male voices, directed by H. E. Knox.

Rev. Richard E. Shields, in his anniversary sermon, spoke on "A Message to Modern Men," emphasizing throughout a strong belief in the manliness of the savior, "who alone," he said, "has the solution to the present-day problems."

An anniversary program for each night during the week is being carried out. Sunday's services attracted crowds too large for the church and many were turned away.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Albert, 381 South Warren avenue, on St. Patrick's evening, the Glenwood Intermediate basketball team gave a party for Miss Ruth Negus, North Hague avenue, who is soon leaving for her future home in Xenia, Ohio.

The decorations were carried out in the team colors—blue and white. A "mock wedding" was the principal entertainment of the evening, the characters being featured by Messrs. Clifford Lane, Paul Jones, Misses Dorothy Strong, Alice Mitchell and Marian King. Refreshments, consisting of ice cream, cake and candy, were served.

Miss Negus was the recipient of a handsome gift—a Bible—from the team, Paul Jones delivering the presentation speech, the honoree pleasantly responding.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert and Mrs. Carl Johnson chaperoned the party.

You'll Save Money by Remodeling Now

You who have been waiting for lower prices before you laid that hardwood floor, renewed those old walls and ceilings, re-roofed the house or barn, or built the garage---this message is directed to you.

Do you know that lumber and building material prices are down forty per cent?

Do you know that you can repair or remodel cheaper than at any time in the past five years?

Do you realize that every day you wait not only inconveniences you but costs you real money?

Building material prices may come down more--we think not---but every day you delay in getting the new garage deprives you of the use of it, and causes you to pay out money for garage rent.

Every day you delay roofing the barn and the home, makes your property more liable to damage from storm. Every day you put off inside repairs the trouble increases and the total expense becomes greater.

Do your repairing and remodeling at the persent bargain prices and get the benefit now.

(©, 1911, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"M-e-e-ow!"

The wail of a cat is no uncommon thing in New York, and Edward Hunter did not think anything particularly about this particular outburst; but as it repeated itself he was struck with the plaintiveness of the voice—not at all like the strident howls with which the common variety of alley-beast shutters the welkin and the rest of folks in the small hours. "Kitten in trouble," thought Edward Hunter, and looked about to find the cause of the noise.

"Me-e-e-ow!" There was no doubt about it this time. A youth of the cat breed had undoubtedly gotten itself into a scrape and was bewailing the fact. Interested, Hunter continued to search with his eyes. A third repetition of the heartbroken mewing caused him to raise his eyes heavenward, and at last he saw the kitten. It was clinging precariously to the cross-arm at the top of a lamppost, afraid to jump and at the same time not at all pleased with its present haven.

Hunter wondered how the little thing had managed to perch itself so high. But even as he wondered the kitten, with a desperate look in its eye, gathered its small self into a furry bundle and launched itself into the air, apparently trusting to the fate that watches over little cats for a safe landing.

It jumped straight at Hunter, and that youth, although surprised, managed to catch it and get it into a safe position in his arms. It seemed surprised, but recognizing in Hunter a man who was kind to kittens, accepted the situation philosophically and made no attempt to escape. Hunter cuddled it sympathetically.

"You poor little cuss," he said. "Out all night, I'll bet, and treed most of the time. Wonder who you are? You're no common cat, that's sure."

The kitten responded with a faint mew—a mew that had lost its quality of woe, but still expressed longings of a sort. Hunter recognized the primal yearning of the entire animal family.

"Hungry," he remarked to himself. "Very well, then," he continued, addressing his small charge, "we'll just run up to my place and I'll see if there are any mice or anything in the icebox."

At Hunter's bachelor apartment the kitten proceeded to put itself in deadly and immediate peril of acute indigestion by consuming the greater part of a half-pint of milk at record-breaking speed. Hunter watched it anxiously, but it showed no immediate signs of dissolution; in fact, it curled itself up on the rug and went to sleep with a contented little purr. Hunter removed the dish and returned to the observation of the infant cat.

He had noticed a thin red ribbon around its neck as he caught it from the lamppost; but now, as it lay on its side, he saw a tiny silver tag attached to the ribbon. He took it in his fingers, gently for fear of awaking the kitten, and with some difficulty deciphered the inscription. It was a street address—nothing more.

"No. 34 Ralston place, Morristown," he said. "H'm—must be a pet pussy. I greatly fear you and I are going to part company before the sun sets. I'd like to keep you, but you're probably causing some old maid a succession of heart attacks. When you wake up you and I are going to make a trip to your presumably distracted mistress. So sleep while you can, for it's you for a basket and the ferries."

He busied himself about the room for a while; then, as the hour drew on toward noon, he went out, had lunch at his club and returned to find the kitten very much awake and amusing itself by experimenting with the movables on his table, most of which lay scattered on the floor.

Hunter rescued the inkwell just in time, and unceremoniously bundled pussy into a light basket. Then the two set out for Morristown.

No. 34 Ralston place proved to be an attractive house set in the midst of a green, tree-shaded lawn. He walked up the path and rang the bell. A neat, white-capped maid answered his ring, and he was soon in the presence of his imagined "old maid." His expectations were dashed, however, for the owner of the stray, when she entered the room, caused him to spring to his feet with a flush on his face.

He knew that here was the one face he had sought all his life—and he had imagined her old and cranky! This beautiful girl of twenty or so, with light hair curling about a clear face, with the bluest eyes he had ever seen—Hunter found himself stammering something that he felt instinctively was banal.

"But I know you've had a lot of trouble with Skookum." So that was the kitten's name. How adorable she was! The girl, not the kitten, of course.

"No trouble at all," he assured her. "I'm sure that it was a pleasure to—to return it to you."

He laughed deliciously. "That's not very complimentary to Skookum," she replied.

"Oh, but I didn't mean that—at least, not that way." He was fussed—he was distinctly fussed, and getting more so every minute, he thought. If only she wouldn't look at a fellow that way! It was disconcerting, very.

"I—I think I must be going," he stammered.

"Oh, but you must stay and have tea," she cried. "And at least let me know to whom it is that I am obliged." His name was returning. "My name's Hunter—Edward Hunter. And I don't want you to feel obliged to me. But if you must, won't you tell me to whom I owe this pleasure?"

She blushed ever so slightly.

"I'm Estelle Easterman," she replied. "I live here all alone with my mother. I'm sure that I'm awfully glad to have met you, Mr. Hunter. And now let's have tea."

They had tea and much talk. And Hunter departed; but not without having extracted an invitation to call again.

* * * * * * *

Some six months later Skookum, vastly improved in stature and disposition, found the house in an unaccountable flutter. His mistress, who had always paid so much attention to him, was dressed all in white, with a long floating veil not at all like her ordinary attire. Skookum tried to play with the veil and was sternly chidden. And there was music, and hundreds of people about the place, none of whom paid the least attention to Skookum.

And presently his mistress walked slowly down the stairs and was met by a man whom Skookum remembered as his one-time benefactor; and a man in black clothes said something, and the other man kissed his mistress, and there was great scurrying and hurrying. Skookum felt very neglected, and was on the point of voicing his feelings when his mistress and the man rushed up to him and caught him in their arms and kissed him and each other indiscriminately.

"He's responsible for it all," said the man. "Bless him!"

"He is, the darling!" said his mistress. "He shall have cream for dinner tonight."

And he did.

Ethel Ory, 160 South Hague avenue, received a letter from Peking, China, from Willo Hickor of Glenwood Church, describing her pleasant trip and safe arrival.

John Jacob Astor, head of that famous family of American bankers and financial giants, came near being a butcher. His father, old Jacob Astor, was a butcher in Germany, and wanted John to become one also. John refused, and came to America, but the hard times he had known as the butcher's son, a wasteful, beer-drinking butcher at that, had impressed upon him the value of a penny. He went into the fur trade and soon was on the road to wealth. His favorite story in after years was of his going to a bank with a note which the teller refused without the indorsement of someone known to him.

"I doubt if you could make good on this note should we demand payment," said the clerk, superciliously glancing over the plain attire of Astor.

"Would the indorsement of Mr. ——, or Mr.——or Mr.——be sufficient?" asked Astor naming the three richest merchants in town.

"Oh yes. Any one of them will do. They are all rich," said the teller, and then he added his estimate of the fortune of each.

"Well, my boy," said Astor with a smile. "I am worth more than all three of them put together."

"Then you are a bigger fool than I took you for," snorted the bank official. "You work harder than their meanest porters. We cannot loan money to fools."

But he did, and lived to laugh with Astor over the incident, years later

The neighbors and friends of Mrs. Emilie Schaible met at her home at 147 S. Eureka Ave. on Wednesday afternoon, March 9th, to observe the anniversary of her birthday. Their arrival was a complete surprise to the hostess, who was expecting only a call from near relatives, but she in every way proved herself equal to the occasion.

The afternoon was very pleasantly spent in music and social intercourse, after which a most sumptuous dinner was served, fifteen covers being laid and roses being the prevailing decoration.

Mrs. Schaible was the recipient of several material remembrances, both useful and beautiful. The hour for departure arrived all too quickly and the merry guests reluctantly took leave, wishing Mrs. Schaible many happy returns of the day.

FRENCH OPEN POTASH MINES

Again Rival of Germany as Producer From Fields of Alsace Now Controlled by France.

New York.—The potash mines of Alsace, which before the war were operated by the Germans, but now are under French control, have been restored to working order, and France has again become a rival of Germany in the world's markets as a producer of this fertilizing agent, say French agents here.

Prior to the war the Germans controlled virtually the only source of the world's supply of potash, and while the great conflict was in progress farmers everywhere suffered from lack of it.

With the restoration of Alsace to France, French engineers began the work of restoring the mines to activity, and after two years of effort, now announce that new machinery has been installed, the extraction shafts repaired and refining plants put in working order.

Obituary

John and Mary Alban with several other families, in the summer of 1834 emigrated from Wales, coming direct to the Moriah neighborhood in Madison township, Jackson County, Ohio, which was then a dense forest. They were among the first Welsh settlers of that community.

To them were born several children, one of whom the last survivors of the family is the subject of this brief sketch.

Alban Alban was born March 20, 1840 in Madison township and died March 18th, 1921, at the home of his son, Mose Alban in Jefferson township, Jackson County, Ohio, lacking two days of being 81 years old.

The deceased like most boys of that community in those days had but little opportunity for an education. Schools like everything else were in their primitive stages, and work was crowding that children could not avail themselves of the meager opportunities offered. He was not an illiterate by any means. He remained on the farm until he was grown, occasionally employed by the neighbors to assist with their work. This can be said of Mr. Alban that when he hired to do a day's work he would put in full time and the work well and neatly done. To "get by" with a job was not in his vocabulary. He was an honest workman.

He with many of the young men of his community, in the summer of 1864 enlisted in the army of the Civil War with Co. E 179th Reg. O. V. I. serving till the end of the war, when he received an honorable discharge, returning afterwards home to friends and associates.

June 25th, 1867 he was married to Catherine, daughter of William Jones and wife, a well-known and respected family of Oak Hill. These parents have the rare distinction of rearing to maturity ten boys, viz.: (will not name them in order of their ages), John and Mose living in the Oak Hill neighborhood; William in Wood County, Ohio; Daniel in Cincinnati, O.; Thomas T., Evan and Luther in Columbus, O.; David in Venedocia, O.; Gomer in the state of Florida; and Morgan in Norwood, O.; Thomas and David are twins. Eight of the boys present today—all except Thomas and Gomer.

Mr. and Mrs. Alban lived together for over 52 years on different farms in Madison and Jefferson Townships, never leaving Jackson County, but 8 of the boys have gone forth to other counties, cities, and state, and there will teach by their lives, to some extent those things they learned at home, church and community. How important what to teach. Just a little more than a year ago Mrs. Alban passed away leaving him a lonely widower. Soon after he went to live with his son Mose Alban and wife, where he enjoyed the best attention and service they could render; during his last sickness which lasted three or four months, his son John, assisted them materially.

He united with the church early in life and remained a consistent member to the end, attended church services regularly when health permitted, especially Sunday School and Sunday morning Bible Class, always preparing before coming, usually having a fair conception of the lesson for the day. Only those that attended this class knew the efforts he put forth no matter how far he lived from the church.

He was always on time for service, never late. He was a member of the G. A. R. Post, as the presence of many of his comrades in a body testify. He was also a very faithful member of the brotherhood of Free Masons, joined at Thurman, Ohio. His zeal, loyalty and devotion to this organization never waned.

Today you boys and grandchildren stand face to face with grim visaged death, surrounded by shadows and gloom; the last link in the chain that connected your pioneer grandfather with yourselves is broken; the last visible factor that connected you as a family is gone. But may you see the vision beyond, this Easter time, where God is ever ready to unite you in one brotherhood and family in Christ Jesus.

We desire to thank all who in any way showed their sympathy, and tendered services to us during the illness and after the death of our dear father, Alban Alban. We mention with pleasure the consoling remarks made by the Rev. D. Forest Williams, Rev. Rowland Jones and his pastor, Dr. J. C. Jones at the funeral.

One who was present.

Easter is past, but memories of the day will linger with those who worshipped at St. Paul's United Evangelical Church. The Sunday School gave a splendid program of song, recitation and orchestra. ### WORK.

One evening as John Elliot sat in a great comfortable chair in his brightly lighted living room, resting and thinking, after a very busy day at the office, his mind turned back to his early boyhood days. Days that now seemed the happiest of his life but days that had been filled with useful activity. He had been reared on a farm. His father had a huge farm and managed its many activities in such a capable and efficient way that he was considered among his neighbors as the best farmer in the county. His genius also expressed itself in his ability to keep others of the family, boys and girls busy at useful tasks. As John Elliot recalled those early days with their lessons of perseverance and industry, their rewards in joy and satisfaction in tasks well done, a sense of gratification came over him and he felt a deep feeling of gratitude for those wholesome instructions of boyhood. He recalled the lines of a poem often quoted by his father:

"Work! Work! My boy. Be not afraid,
Look labor boldly in the face.
Take up the hammer or the spade
And blush not for your humble place."

"There's glory in the shuttle's song,
There's triumph in the anvil's stroke,
There's merit in the brave and strong
Who dig the mine, or fell the oak."

And then John Elliot's mind came back to the present and he thought howt much good this gospel of work, with its beauty and its sanctity, would do today. What a transformation would come to pass if everybody set to work and with a zeal and an earnestness that carried them beyond mere compulsion. He realized that all must work a certain amount through sheer compulsion but he dreamed of that realm of freedom, where men went the second mile, went beyond the point set by the Great God Must. There they would find real liberty. What a world this would be if all men vied with each other in doing all they could for their fellow men.

Then John Elliot thought, with a feeling of reproach, that he had not done all he could in his own family and neighborhood to encourage good honest work and indeed he had more or less discouraged it. For had he not time after time said "Well, I will give my children a good education so they will not have to work as hard as I have." He now saw the fallacy of this. He saw that the only justification for an education was that you might work harder. And as he recalled the closing lines:

"I doubt if he who lolls his head
Where idleness and plenty meet
Enjoys his pillow or his bread
As those who earn the meals they eat."

"And man is never half so blest
As when the busy day is spent
So as to make his evening's rest
A Holiday of glad content."

He decided to preach this old Gospel in this New Day.

SPRING WEIRD IDEAS

"Inventors" Relieve Monotony for British Commission.

One Would Freeze the Clouds So Guns Could Be Mounted on Them to Repel Air Attacks.

London.—The report recently issued by the royal commission on awards to inventors calls to mind both the new powerful engines of destruction the war brought into being, and also the many weird and impracticable ideas advanced by "inventors" who had evolved curious plans for winning the war. A one-time member of the war inventions department of the ministry of munitions told of one man who sent in an invention which he said could freeze clouds so that guns could be mounted on them for firing at aircraft and bombing enemy lines. He was kindly but firmly led to the door, but before he left managed to explain a scheme he had for suspending heavy guns from captive balloons.

One inventor wished to project heat waves against airplanes and so destroy them. Part of his plan was to set up electric fields that would paralyze the magnetos of enemy airplanes when they attempted an attack. None of these enthusiasts seemed to realise the limitations of their suggestions. A man planned to attach searchlights to anti-aircraft guns, and so fire along the beam of light. He neglected the fact that the path of a shell and the path of a ray of light are somewhat different.

Among other weird inventions was one for throwing live wire cables against the enemy, using rockets to get the cables across No Man's Land. It was suggested that a tunnel be built all the way into Germany, and also that trained cormorants be sent to pick the mortar out of the chimneys of the Krupp factories at Essen.

LEPROSY OIL CURE SUCCESS

Need for Mission Near Honolulu Decreases—To Abandon It in Few Years.

Honolulu, T. H.—The Catholic leper mission on the island of Molokai, where Father Damien passed the greater part of his life and eventually died of the disease, and where Brother Dutton and others of his faith now are at work, probably will be abandoned in the course of a few years, owing to the great success of the chaulmoogra oil treatment of the lepers, according to a statement by Brother Louis Leison, who for twenty-two years has been stationed at the leper mission.

Five years ago the mission at Kalaupa, island of Molokai, had from 125 to 130 inmates, while today it has but 63, Brother Louis said. Virtually no new cases have been received during the last few years.

The mission, which was established in the sixties and in which the Catholic priests shortly after took up their work, is supported by appropriations from both the territorial and federal governments. All leper work on the island, including that of the mission, is directly under the supervision of the territorial board of health.

Labor of 200,000 Men Support Rat Population

Washington.—It keeps 200,000 men working full time to support the nation's rat population. That assertion is made by the biological survey bureau in figures issued showing that there are as many "common brown rats" as humans in the United States, and each of the 100,000,000 or more destroy $2 worth of foodstuffs a year.

They also maintain an efficient transportation system for "black death" and other plague germs, the bureau adds in urging a starve and slay campaign to check "a real hazard against American lives and property."

ABANDONED FARMS FOR IDLE

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Scores of farms in Allegheny county, abandoned in the rush from rural districts to industrial centers during the war, are being used by the farm bureau here in an effort to solve the unemployed and housing problems.

The bureau has advertised for married men who are willing to work as tenant farmers. Such men who qualify will be placed in charge of the abandoned farms, officials of the bureau say.

Do You Know The Facts About Building Costs?

Do you know that lumber and building materials are down?

Have you talked to us lately about building?

Do you know how reasonably you can make needed repairs, build your new home, or remodel your old one?

Better get in touch with the situation at once.

The big building program that was expected in 1920 failed to develop. The manufacturers were caught with too large stocks, and were forced to turn them over at almost cost.

We can show you a substantial saving on every item in our line.

But it's fair to tell you this condition may be only temporary. The country is short more than a million homes. Our own city is short hundreds of homes. When people begin to do this long delayed building, demand will increase rapidly, creating another shortage of materials, and prices will advance again.

If you are planning to build, remodel, or repair, come in and let us give you figures. Then when we show you the actual savings over last year's prices and show you how favorably present costs compare with those of 1914, make your own decision.

Get in touch with us today. See our plan book, it has many helpful suggestions.

Never Thought of That

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Agatha Woods put down the "Weekly Gazette," and when she resumed her knitting her fingers trembled. Harriet, her sharp-eyed sister, gaunt and sunburned from working in the fields with the men, regarded her from drooping lids.

"Any particular news, Aggie?" she asked, bending over to mend a basket handle. "I ain't had time to read the paper this week."

Agatha shook her head. "Nothing very much," she returned slowly, then she added swiftly as if afraid her natural reticence would withhold it, "Nathan Storm's home again."

Harriet picked up her mended basket and a painful blush stained her comely face. "I know it—the men told me. I'm going now. We want to get the hay in before it rains."

"What can I do?" called Agatha from the doorstep.

"Have supper ready when the storm breaks," was Harriet's reply.

"That's so easy," sighed Agatha. "Harriet always gives me the easy load. I wonder if she sent Nathan away because her duty was to stay by me?"

She busied herself about the evening meal while distant thunder growled along the horizon. She made a huge strawberry shortcake, prepared ice cold tea, cut slices of delicious pink ham, baked biscuits and brought out a great plate of ginger cookies. When the table was ready with its snowy cloth and lavender sprigged china she sat down and resumed her knitting and with knitting came thoughts of Nathan Storm.

He and Harriet had loved, and because young Agatha had flirted with Nathan, Harriet had felt it her duty to give up Nathan to her little sister but Nathan refused to be given up nor did he want any one but Harriet herself, th[illegible]utiful, brown, Hebelike young woman. Harriet was firm in duty to Agatha, stern in upholding her trust to her dead parents, and so Nathan went away.

"He Did Bring Something Back!"

Twenty years had passed away. Agatha was a delicate woman, working about the house in happy contentment; Harriet took the man's part and managed the farm. They were now well-to-do and had never missed the happiness that marriage brings in its wake.

"I must make them happy this time," Agatha mused, and a worried frown came over her placid face. "Harriet's got to marry him now! I will miss her, though—it will be lonesome enough in the old place—maybe they would like to live here and I could go to the old ladies' home—Amanda Petty is there—and she would be real good company for me."

The storm broke just as the last load of hay rolled into the great barn like a triumphal chariot, and Agatha flew to put the last touches to the evening meal. Soon the hay-makers would come in, hot and tired, to dash themselves with cool water in the shed room, dry themselves on the fresh towels and then eat like hungry wolves. This supper was to celebrate the last of the hay making.

Harriet's eyebrows went up at sight of the daintily spread table, but as the workers were all neighbors and friends she was glad that Agatha had made a little feast of it. All the time she was eating one thought was droning through Harriet's busy brain. "Next hay making time I'll be in the old ladies' home and Nathan will be managing the farm while Agatha waits for him—I'll miss not having her waiting for me—she won't miss me, she'll have Nathan."

The two sisters did not eat much—they talked about the hay and about the storm, which was very severe. Harriet got up and lighted the swinging lamp over the table and pulled down the window shades. "I expect Nathan will put in electric lights," she thought as she sat down again. One of the men was speaking and a familiar name caught her attention.

"Nathan Storm's home again," he informed them.

"I [illegible]" said Agatha politely, and [illegible]

"Is he going to stay home now?" asked Harriet.

"I guess so—he's going to work at the shipyard. Says he'll settle down as soon as he can find a house to live in. Nathan asked after you, folks," he nodded at Agatha.

"We went to school with him," said Harriet stiffly.

"Sayin' school?" chuckled Adam Smith.

"Little red schoolhouse," choked Agatha, feeling sorry for her sister.

"He didn't seem to make any great success out of life," went on Adam, helping himself to another cookie. "Hasn't much money, but he did bring something back!"

"What was that?" asked Harriet, feeling sorry for Agatha.

"A wife and seven children—keep him hustlin' for their bread and butter—well, good-night, Harriet and Agatha—this has been a grand supper, the best I have ever eaten!"

"Wait till next year—we'll have the biggest harvest supper and ask all the folks around," declared Harriet as she and her sister stood in the doorway and watched the workers wending their way down the road. The storm was over and the smell of the wet earth was pleasant. Then they turned and faced each other with guilty eyes.

"Nathan here with a wife," breathed Agatha simply.

"And seven children," added Harriet.

"We'll have to see them every day, Harriet."

"Expect they'll overrun the neighborhood, but we haven't got to worry about 'em, except to hand them flowers over the fence," said the stern Harriet with a wonderful smile lighting her strong features.

"And apples," added Agatha, then with a little burst of affection she put her arms around her stronger sister. "I'm so glad, Harry!"

"Glad? When I was worried because I thought you'd be marrying Nathan and going off and leaving me!"

"And I thought the same of you!"

The sisters whom romance had passed by kissed each other joyfully and a great peace and happiness settled down over the old house where two women had just learned that an old flame had burned out, and that the haying storm had blown even the ashes away.

CREATURES OF PAST AGES

Remarkable Prehistoric Monsters That Can Be Identified Only by Their Fossilized Bones.

What geologists term the Oligocene formations contain the fossil bones of a great variety of strange extinct animals. These strata are among the most widespread and most regularly distributed of the Tertiary sedimentary rock formations of the Great plains and cover a vast area in Nebraska and Wyoming.

The lower Oligocene beds, which are believed to be over a million years old, are often called Titanotherium beds because they contain great quantities of the bones of extinct mammals of that name. They were clumsy brutes of elephantine size, according to the United States geological survey, Department of the Interior, having on the front of the skull a pair of great bony protuberances which, although hornlike in form, were probably not sheathed in horn. The head was long and large and of fantastic shape. In its thick, heavy body and short, massive legs the titanothere resembled the modern rhinoceros. It was doubtless a sluggish, stupid beast, for its brain was small in comparison with the size of its body. The brain cavity was only a few inches in diameter and was surrounded by thick bone, as if to withstand shocks in battle. The titanotheres were the most formidable animals of the time, and though, so far as known, there were then no carnivores capable of doing them serious harm, yet they seem to have disappeared suddenly from North America.

The animals of Oligocene time seem to have been abundant as well as varied in kind. Among the characteristic animals of this epoch were primitive forms of rhinoceroses, peccaries, ruminants, camels, insectivores and opossums. Some of the flesh eaters of the preceding Eocene epoch had developed into true carnivores, including many forms of both doglike and catlike animals. The saber-toothed tiger, one of the most formidable enemies of primitive man, first appeared in the Oligocene epoch.

The horses whose history began with the diminutive four-toed Eohippus continued in the Oligocene, in which they were represented by many three-toed forms that were about as large as sheep. Hoglike animals were rather numerous, and although many of them were smaller than the modern swine, some of them were very large. One of these was a formidable beast with curious protuberances on its head, the use of which is not known. Rhinoceroses similar to those now found in Africa and India lived in western America, and other rhinoceroslike animals were abundant.

Took a Lashing.

Tardy—Had a wordy battle with friend wife when I sneaked in this morning.

Hardy (smiling)—Take the count?

Tardy—Think I'm a lightning calculator? But offhand I should say she was entitled to the decision by about 9,999 words.

Openings.

"If a boy has never told a lie, slate him for President."

"And if otherwise?"

"Well, there's the diplomatic service."

REMEMBERED FOR ONE SONG

Dr. Thomas Dunn English Practically Unknown Except as the Author of "Ben Bolt."

Dr. Thomas Dunn English did a prodigious amount of work in his lifetime, but all of it has been forgotten except the single song, "Ben Bolt." He was a physician, a journalist and a politician, as well as a poet, an essayist and a novelist.

Dr. English was born in Philadelphia June 29, 1819. He was graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, and afterward studied law. He was a Democratic member of the Fifty-second and Fifty-third congresses. For a number of years he was a newspaper man. In 1843 he wrote "Ben Bolt." The poem attracted attention, and was widely copied in England. Dr. English received no money for it. He put "Ben Bolt" to music, but the sales were light. In 1848 "The Battle of Buena Vista" was presented in Pittsburgh, and "Ben Bolt" was sung in one of the scenes. The great popularity of the song dates from that time.

"Ben Bolt" was extensively parodied for half a century. A race horse, a ship and a steamboat were named for it. Dr. English remarked grimly that the ship was wrecked, the steamboat blown up and the horse turned out a selling plater. Du Maurier for some reason chose it when he wrote "Trilby," thinking it to have been an old English melody. This helped to keep it alive.

Inauguration Bibles.

For his inauguration President Cleveland provided a Bible, little larger than a human hand, that was presented to him by his mother when he was a child. In marked contrast was McKinley's inaugural Bible, which was a tremendous affair, bound in morocco and presented to him by the negro bishop of the country. Roosevelt used the same book as on the occasion of his assumption of the governorship of New York and Woodrow Wilson took the oath both times on the Bible he had used when sworn in as governor of New Jersey.

Fatal Accident

An accident which resulted in the death of Daniel Rosenbecker occurred in West Broad street, near Powell avenue, Tuesday night. Rosenbecker, driving a motorcycle belonging to Thomas Dennis, and with Early Williams, 26, of Galena, riding in a sidecar, crashed into a pile of ties. Patrolman William E. Hutt, who was passing in an auto picked up both men and took them to Mt. Carmel Hospital. Rosenbecker died a few moments after reaching the hospital. Williams has a broken left knee and internal injuries.

The two were on the way to Rome to visit a relative of Early Williams and the machine, it is said, was being driven at high speed.

Adventure

The story is often told of a man who was dissatisned with his lot and fortune in many countries and climes. He wandered the world over in search of adventure for he had a curious and somewhat superstitious belief that his fortune would be found in the same place he discovered his first four-leaf clover. Strange to say, after he had spent his life in fruitless search, he returned home a decrepit old man, only to find the four-leaf clover at his own back door. And in accordance with his belief he found joy and peace in his declining years in tilling his few acres, reaping the harvest of contentment and garnering the gold of true friendship.

So it is with us today. The sky is bluer in California. The sun shines more beneficently in Sunny Italy. Joy and pleasure abound on Florida's sandy shores. Wealth awaits the investor in Texas oils. The choicest places are those most inaccessible. We travel hundreds of miles for our vacations while wonders all about us remain unexplored. We read of the Pyramids of Egypt with awe, and forget the equally wonderful traces of the Mound Builders in our own state. We talk of mammoth ocean going freighters, and overlook the great steel vessels of our Great Lakes. We look with wonder and admiration upon the great water supply system of the City of New York, but are inclined to overlook the fact that Columbus has the most wonderful water supply system in the country, if not in the whole world. (Columbus has the distinction of having the lowest death rate from typhoid fever of any city in the country.)

So let us hunt the four-leaf clovers at home first. Mr. and Mrs. Vacationist, who are thinking of taking your vacation around about July or August, please remember that the Hilltop will offer you one of the greatest treats of your lifetime, right here at home in the shape of a week of Redpaths Chautauqua. A veritable feast of education, amusement and recreation will be offered for a sum which in all probability would not equal one-fourth of your railroad fare to that distant point. Mr. Stay-at-Home, you are to be congratulated upon your good fortune. Something rare is in store for you.

The Hilltop Chautauqua Association will hold a meeting at Carlile and Kerr's store, 2357 W. Broad, Friday evening, April 8, at 7:30 p. m. Everybody welcome.

W. L. ROLLER, Sec'y.

Rev. A. E. Cowley has received a call to conduct two weeks' special services at the Second Baptist Church of Newark. He was pastor there for two years previous to coming to Hill Crest. He organized this church also. He expects to begin April 17 and his old friends are expecting great things under their former pastor.

The recent high waters bring to mind the flood of 1913, also it should not be forgotten the service one of our Hilltop men did in walking the cable and making telephone connection for the west and east side people at the drug store, corner of Oakley and Broad. People were standing in line for place to hear if the folks over there were well and safe. Mr. Sites, of 74 South Ogden Ave., was the man who did it.

The Friends Rescue Home, North Hague Ave., will hold their Sixteenth Anniversary on April 14. There will be a special program, with good speakers present. This institution is doing a grand work in its work among girls and deserves the support of all our people. They are very much in need of more housing room in order to accommodate the increasing demand made upon them and it is hoped that need will soon be supplied.

PREFERS JAIL TO HUSBANDS

Bigamist Says Her Experience Proves All Men Alike—Had Three Husbands.

New York.—That life in Clinton reformatory, New Jersey, is preferable to life with any imaginable husband is the conclusion of Emma J. Preiss, thirty-three, who was held in $3,000 bail by Recorder Cain of Bayonne on a charge of bigamy.

Mrs. Preiss has had three husbands and considers herself qualified to speak.

"My experience with men began early, and was varied, but I have never found much difference between them.

"You may talk about women being gold diggers. They don't class with the men. Once you give a man an idea you have money you can always get him."

RAID VIENNA PRIVATE BANKS

22,000,000 Crowns Found in Safe Concealed in the Wall of Lavatory.

Vienna.—The wild speculation in foreign moneys here has caused renewed activity on the part of the police in raiding "exchange coffee houses" and private banks. They have secured many millions of crowns, but made the biggest haul when they tapped the wall of a lavatory in one bank and found a concealed door to a safe in which were 22,000,000 crowns in American, English and other foreign values.

RELATES BURIAL OF WASHINGTON

Fake Ulster County Gazette Most Noted Newspaper Forgery of Country.

NO GENUINE COPY KNOWN

Library Officials Doubt If There Is Genuine Copy of Newspaper of That Date in Existence—Forgery Is Easily Proven.

Chicago. — Perennially and usually about this time copies of the most noted newspaper forgery of the country — the Ulster County Gazette of January 4, 1800, with its account of Washington's funeral—comes to light. The only other newspaper imitation of the kind that compares is the duplication of the Vicksburg Citizen, printed on wall paper during the siege in 1862.

"I doubt if there is a genuine copy of the Ulster County Gazette of that date in existence," Edward A. Henry, who is in charge of the University of Chicago's collection of old newspapers, said. "At any rate, I have never seen one, nor do I know of anybody who has.

"Wilberforce Eames of the New York public library told me half a dozen years ago that he had made the most careful examinations of copies of the Gazette submitted to him as genuine—even to chemical analysis of the paper—and had almost come to the conclusion that there never was an original.

26 Different Editions.

"At the Library of Congress I was told they had 26 different editions. The New York public library lists nine in its latest catalog. We have three, each different from the other.

"I suppose there was once a genuine Ulster County Gazette of the date named, from which all these subsequent copies have been made. The fact that the Wisconsin State Historical society, which has the largest collection of old newspapers in the Middle West, lists two copies of an Ulster Gazette for August 18 and September 22, 1804, strengthens this belief.

"The account of Washington's funeral is accurate and interesting. No fault can be found on that score, although I think reports of the funeral in other papers of the same time are in several instances still more striking.

"It may have been that many years after the funeral some printer probably in the vicinity of New York, for Kingston, Ulster county, is on the Hudson, thought to produce something of interest to others and profit to himself by making a facsimile of an original account. Had he taken a New York paper, the duplication could have been instantly detected and perhaps for this reason the obscure Ulster county paper was made to serve.

Trick Went Well.

"The trick evidently went well, and perhaps it was this same printer that put out many of the subsequent editions. That is all supposition of course, but there is no doubt of the multitude of editions. Their genuineness only an expert can pass on in most cases. The test is the paper. Most of these copies were made before 1850, but not early enough to have used the fine linen rag paper of 1800. That soft paper will be good for many hundred years yet, while the earliest Ulster County Gazette we have is already badly discolored.

"Variations are found in the printing of the different editions of the same date. In two of our copies the name of the paper is set in italics; in the other it is not. The enterprising publisher of the newest of our forgeries added the word 'copyright.'"

Joined Church; Restored Bill Taken Years Before

A $5 bill, that had been carried for 25 years by a man to whom a Portland (Me.) merchant gave two bills instead of one in making change, was returned to the merchant a few days ago. The man explained that his conscience had troubled him so that he had feared to spend the money, and recently, when he had joined a church, he felt impelled to return it.

Auto Accident Restores Sight.

Ravenna, O.—Ernest Holister of Bradford, Ont., did not thank the driver of an automobile when he was struck here some time ago, but now he is ready, he says, to decorate him. Two years ago Holister lost the sight of his right eye while in the employ of an engineering company here. One day while returning from work he was run down. On his recovery from his injuries he was astonished to find the sight of his eye fully restored.

Chile to Grow Sugar Cane.

Valparaiso.—Sugar cane growing is to be attempted in northern Chile. Experiments are now in progress under the direction of a Spanish expert, and work soon is to be started on canals to irrigate the lands recently purchased by a sugar company of Tacna.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY IN SCHOOLS

Superintendent at Columbus, Ohio, Adopts New System of Study in Public Institutions.

Columbus, O.—The eight-hour union day has invaded the public schools here, and Superintendent J. G. Collicott has launched a movement for an eight-hour day for students.

His plan, however, does not contemplate that children shall actually attend school eight hours a day, but that the time devoted to recitations, school study and study at home shall amount to a full working day.

To further the plan, pupils have adopted a daily study and class program, one copy of which will go to the teacher, another to the parents. The idea is that both parents and teachers, with the daily routine of the children before them, should see that they perform all the tasks assigned to them.

Boy 14 Eats 150 Olives in Ten Minutes for $10

Long Beach.—A fourteen-year-old boy from Los Angeles defeated nine other contestants representing almost as many races, at an olive-eating contest in the Municipal Auditorium. The lad bolted down 150 in ten minutes. Edward Hadover of Long Beach came in second with 142 to his credit. The prize was $10.

Old Debt Paid.

Towanda, Pa.—After waiting 28 years, during which he had given up all hope of ever getting his money back, Louis Marks, a local business man, has received a letter containing $30 from a man who borrowed $10 from him on a note a quater of a century ago.

The man, now living in a small Maryland town, wrote that the $20 was for interest. Marks kept $10 and returned the $20 and the canceled note.

There is nothing on the market like Ke-O-Ka. Now is the time and everybody should use this great blood remedy. Further information given if you will call Hilltop 2866.

Build Now, and Enjoy It

A lady phoned us the other day.

"I've been waiting four years to put hardwood floors in my living room and dining room. I've saved a little money by waiting and perhaps if I wait another four years I may save a few dollars more, but I'm tired of the inconvenience. I want those floors while I'm alive. Send some one up to tell me what they'll cost.

That expresses our feeling exactly.

Why wait to save save five dollars on a repairing or remodeling job, when you can have the work done now and get the pleasure and comfort from it during all the intervening time.

Building material prices are greatly reduced.

You can build a garage or barn, lay hardwood floors, roof your house, replace cracked walls with Beaver Board—at a cost greatly below that of six months ago.

Prices may go slightly lower. It's doubtful. Lumber manufacturers, caught with big stocks, cleaned them out almost at cost. When demand increases they will again ask a fair profit and their quotations will probably be higher.

But at any rate, are you going to let five dollars or ten dollars, or twenty dollars, keep you from having that new garage, those new floors, or those new Beaver Board rooms?

It's worth that much to build them now and enjoy them.

If you'll phone or call us, you'll find us ready with price and materials that are right. Build now.

NOT TURNED BY $720,000 LEGACY

Indiana Second-Hand Furniture Dealer Is Happy Without Immense Fortune.

HEIR TO SLICE OF "PHILLY"

Through Death of Grandfather He Never Heard of J. S. Polk Inherits Share of $6,500,000 Estate—Long-Term Lease Expires.

Chicago.—J. S. Polk, a second-hand furniture dealer at 4716 Olcott avenue, East Chicago, is figuring out what he will do with his share of a $6,500,000 Philadelphia estate which he has been informed has come to him through the death of a grandfather he never heard of.

His first conclusion concerning the disposition of this wealth is that he will give most of it away. He expects his share will be $722,222. He has no scruples against accepting the money and no particular theories about reforming the world with it.

"We couldn't be any happier, friend, but we will be able to make others happier," he said, as he dusted off the old furniture and listened to the voices of four children in play.

Wife and Four Children.

Polk is nearly 60 years old and has Mrs. Polk and the four children to consider, so there is no telling what will happen to the money, if it comes. His story is that recently he received a telegram as follows:

"Sir: You have come into property in Philadelphia through the will of Thomas Bennett of New York. I am empowered to offer you $20,000.

"T. A. Ross, Attorney, Philadelphia."

Polk wired Ross to call on him. Ross came. He offered to settle for $88,000 finally, after Polk had refused other offers. The $88,000 offer also was refused.

"The real estate left by my grandfather is located in the heart of Philadelphia," said Mr. Polk. "I understand I am one of nine heirs. The others, most of them, live in Milwaukee. We met up there about two weeks ago and decided the best thing we can do will be to await developments.

Ninety-Nine Year Lease Expires.

"As I understand it, my grandfather holds the land, which was leased to the city of Philadelphia for 99 years. The lease expires July 30, 1924. We have been unable to locate Mr. Ross lately, but I suppose he is somewhere in Philadelphia."

Mr. Polk added that he will be patient until the "lease expires," then "see what's what."

"And I didn't even know I had a grandfather," ruminated Mr. Polk. "What'll I do with the money when I get it? Well, I'll give away about $100,000 to the Salvation Army. Then Mary and the kids and I will have a good time. We're going to play Andy and Min Gump, and call this money Uncle Bim."

Inquiry in Philadelphia failed to discover Attorney T. A. Ross. Other attorneys of the name of Ross are in practice there, but none knew about the legacy to Polk in the heart of Philadelphia's business district.

SEEK POTATO WART REMEDY

Government Agricultural Experts May Yet Have to Invoke Rites of Mysticism.

Washington.—Mystic rites of childhood for wart removal, involving shivery midnight visits to lonesome, spook-infested grave yards, the use of a rabbit's left hind foot, with proper incantations and the like may yet be necessary to chase warts off potatoes.

At least the department of agriculture has not so far found other means to do the job. Its official witches have steamed, boiled, dosed and otherwise assailed the wart with inconclusive results, according to a report just published. They have not given up, however and still hope to eradicate the plant disease from the country.

Potato wart infection is now limited to a small area in Pennsylvania, due to a 1912 importation of "spuds" which later proved to be undesirable aliens. The experts have tried all sorts of chemical treatment of the soil, and even steamed the ground before planting, but without complete success.

Bear Burned Hair.

Stone, Pa.—A bear shot on the top of the mountain range at Tadaghton Gorge rolled down the mountain side nearly 700 feet and landed at the feet of the hunter, who had fired at it from the bottom of Pine Creek Valley. The side of the mountain is so steep that few men have been able to scale it, and the bear rolled down so fast that the hair was burned from its skin in many places.

Old houses wired for lights. Prices reasonable. Terms. Phone Hilltop 2848 or 48 Clarendon avenue.

CROWD MONTE CARLO

Women Gamblers Outnumber Men at Famous Palace.

Many of Them Do Not Know When They Win or Lose, But That Does Not Deter Them.

London.—This is the women's year at the Monte Carlo casino, writes A. E. Manning Foster to the London Daily Mail. There have never before been so many women gamblers.

Just now English women predominate. There is a fair sprinkling of French, Italians and Spanish, and a few Russians. But it is essentially the season of English women.

Some of them, it is easy to see, have never been here before. They do not know their way about or understand the games.

But that does not deter them in the least. They plank their money down and wait to see what happens, and they keep sharp eyes upon it, too. A man may have his winnings snatched, but a woman—never!

There is novices' luck—who can doubt it?

These newcomers who win at the start are the staunchest and most regular attendants. They become bitten with the gambling fever and cannot miss a sitting.

Morning, noon and night they come to the rooms, drawn by an irresistible lure. For them the many other delights that are to be found in Monte Carlo and the neighborhood exist in vain.

Their lives are centered on the hectic pleasures of the tables. You can tell them at a glance. Their eyes are bright, their cheeks flushed and as the days go on a strained, anxious look comes into their faces and little hard lines develop at the corner of their mouths.

They have gambling fever badly. It must run its course. Most of them will get over it. A few will become chronic cases and will join that pathetic little band of women who cannot help it, women who must gamble as others must take drink or drugs.

Not that the majority of women who throng the rooms are of this kind. There are many sweet and lovely women who have their little flutters just for fun and as an occasional diversion.

INVENTS NEW FLYER IN JAIL

Barcelona Engineer Claims His Machine Will Rise Vertically From the Ground.

CAN DIP IN ANY DIRECTION

French Government Is Interested in Invention and Will Send Technical Commission to Barcelona to Witness the Trials.

London.—Paris, according to the London Daily Telegraph correspondent, is talking about a new flying machine and the romantic story of its invention.

It is called the "helicoptere," and the inventor, M. Pateras-Pescara, a Barcelona engineer, made his discovery in the Sante prison at two o'clock in the morning. It is claimed for this new flying vehicle, in which the French government is interested, for it will send a technical mission to Barcelona to witness the trials, that passengers can descend from the air with the same comfort as though they were sitting in armchairs.

How It Works.

The invention consists of an axle fixed to a motor which is placed in the vehicle. The axle sets in motion sets of propellers, one set turning one way, one another. The vehicle rises vertically from the ground; it can dip in every direction, remain immobile in space, and decend like an airplane with engine stopped.

M. Pateras-Pescara, a nationalized Argentine, who married an Austrian princess, had to leave Italy when that country entered the war. He came to France, where he was employed in the ministry of inventions. In 1910 he was at work on a bombing machine which was intended to fly between Paris and Berlin with a cargo of explosives at a speed of 180 miles an hour. He had had trouble with the diplomatists and was watched by the international police.

Arrested, he was taken to the Saute prison, and it was in his cell on December 18, 1916, that he solved the problem of the "helicoptere." The expulsion proceedings against him were dropped, and after his release he applied himself to his invention.

Proves Successful.

In August, 1919, a mission from the French air department went to Barcelona to witness the trials of his parachute "helicoptere," and as a result of its report a contract was signed with the inventor. Compelled to reside outside France, M. Pescara built a definite model of his machine at Barcelona. It was tried recently, and it is said that the propellers worked admirably.

With reference to this claim of the Barcelona inventor, it may be pointed out that there is nothing whatever new about the idea of a "helicoptere," i. e., a machine capable of rising from the ground by the action of horizontally-placed propellers. The plan, in fact, is one of the oldest in the history of aeronautical theory and experiment, and has been put forward more than once during the past quarter of a century. Whether M. Pescara has succeeded in surmounting the difficulties heretofore encountered remains to be seen.

Dog Saves Master.

McArthur, O.—While A. E. Tuckerman lay sleeping at his home at Radcliff the other day, a man evidently intent on robbery, started to strike Tuckerman with an ax handle. Tuckerman's watch dog seized the would-be assailant and saved his master from injury. The man later was captured and turned over to the sheriff of Vinton county.

Cuts Down Old Tree.

Morganville, Kan.—A catalpa tree planted by John H. Merten of Morganville in 1881 was cut down one day recently by him and he obtained 68 good fence posts from it. The tree was 2 feet in diameter.

Social Stunts

Quite a number of friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Cobesly of 81 North Eureka Ave., to celebrate the anniversary of the latter's birth, Tuesday evening.

The evening was spent in singing and dancing, the music was furnished by Hingst Bros. Orchestra, at a late hour a two course luncheon was served to about fifty guests. All departed wishing the hostess many more happy occasions. Mrs. Colesby received many beautiful gifts, among which was a beautiful diamond ring, which was given from her husband, Mr. Thos. Coberly.

The annual banquet of the J. R. B. Class of the Glenwood Methodist Sunday School, was held at the church, Tuesday evening, April 12. Members with their families and invited guests to the number of two hundred and twenty-five were present and partook of a real treat prepared by the skill of our good friend, Mrs. Hughes.

The class colors of blue, gray and gold, with ferns and potted plants transformed the basement into a real banquet hall. Our beloved teacher, Mrs. Williamson, gave an address of welcome and Rev. Bowman invoked divine blessing.

Following the banquet a program, given by Mary Rudolph, Marjorie Drum and Erma Thompson was enjoyed by all.

Our honorary member, Mrs. M. M. Marshall, long an ardent worker in the different activities of the church was one of the guests present.

Great credit is due to all the committees whose loyal support made the evening such a success and to Mr. George Dial, Mr. Dial, Sr., and their able accompanist who furnished excellent music throughout the evening.

Preparations are beginning to be made for a great celebration by West Side people at the completion of the Broad Street bridge and repaving of Broad Street from said bridge to Sandusky Street. It is not yet known just when that will be but announcement will be made later.

There's More to a Home than Dollars and Cents

No one can measure the cash value of a happy home. It's the biggest thing in life.

If you are living in cramped and uncomfortable quarters, if you have been planning for a home when conditions become right—then see us today. Delay in building fored bldg. material prices down ward at a tremendous clip. Manufacturers, caught with big stocks on hand, have had to turn them over almost at cost.

We have taken advantage of the situation and as a result we are able to show you substantial reductions on practically every item we carry. Reynolds roofing, Beaver Board—many of our prices compare favorably with those of 1914.

This is a good time to see us.

With our city short hundreds of homes people can't delay much longer in their new building. Demand will stimulate prices; manufacturers will again ask a legitimate profit; and we can again expect increased building costs.

In the meantime we offer you a home—and at a price that cannot fail to please you. If you will call or phone us, we will be glad to go into detail. See our book of plans.

BIG FIRE ON HILLTOP

Memorial Day evening will mark an unusual event in the history of the Hilltop. The Mortgage against St. Paul's United Evangelical Church, South Warren, near Broad, will be burned on that night. Great preparations are being made for this occasion and a giant bonfire will be lighted in celebration of it.

Ten teams have been organized and comprise what will be known as "St. Paul's Arson Ring." Each member of these teams will be known by his official badge, upon which will be inscribed, "Official Fire Bug of St. Paul's Arson Ring."

Each stick of kindling will also serve to admit the bearer to the big celebration and bonfire.

Following is the list of teams and their captains:

An Old Friend From the West

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(©, 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Not suspecing that adventure, in the form of a small white card, was awaiting him just over his own threshold, young Doctor Gavin stepped within his apartment.

The small white pasteboard attracted his eye even before he entered. He picked it up and read:

"Grace Darling: Will be expecting you and Bobby on Friday at six. Sorry you are not in."

This was scratched in pencil across the face of the card which further informed the young doctor that Helen Moore was the caller and her telephone number was Plaza 2119.

Now Doctor Gavin felt that at a stretch he might be the "darling" but he most certainly could not be Grace. Deductions then assured him that Helen Moore had made a mistake and pushed her card under the wrong door.

"But who is Grace? And must I make a round of all the apartments in this building in order that Helen's message reach its rightful darling, or," and the doctor knew his second inspiration was going to be the one carried out, "I will call up the young lady and ask who 'darling' is so that I may deliver the message and take more—should Helen's voice strike a vibrant cord in my manly breast." The doctor lifted his prized telephone and called Plaza 2119.

It wasn't every one nowadays who could boast a telephone.

The voice that traveled over the wire was delightful. Upon making his reasons for calling her up known she seemed most grateful.

"It is Mrs. Berkley," Helen Moore said, "and I must have thought the front was the back. They have just moved in and have no telephone. It is so awkward. Yes, if you would be so very kind. Yes. I will hold the wire."

"What Part of the West Do You Come From?"

Doctor Gavin beat a hasty exit to the other apartment on his landing and Tom Berkley answered his knock. His excuses for intrusion being made, he asked if Mrs. Berkley would like to talk with Miss Moore.

Mrs. Berkley, the Grace Darling of the card, appeared flushed and lovely from the kitchenette.

That was only the beginning of numerous messages that Dr. Gavin bore to the other apartment. It seemed as if Helen and Grace had endless things to say to one another after six in the evening, the hour that the doctor reached home.

Three weeks later he was, as he vulgarly expressed it, "thick" with the Berkleys. They liked him and he liked them. In the back of her married heart Grace already had her best chum and the very delightful doctor happily in the matrimonial noose. She did not, however, confide in any one.

Helen Moore was naturally curious as to the general aspect of the man who so kindly acted as messenger and Grace always willingly expounded his charm, but that charm was totally the reverse type of Dr. Gavin. Helen had confessed to a thrilly feeling over the affair and had an unexpressed desire to meet the bearer of messages.

The day was fast approaching when Doctor Gavin realized that a meeting was inevitable. He wanted it, yet was curiously panicky at the very mention of a foursome dinner, often casually suggested by Tom Berkley.

"Doctor Gavin," said Grace after mature thought, "will you come in and have dinner with us tomorrow night? Helen is couing and I know you feel a bit squirmy about actually meeting her, so I have quite a nice little idea. I will tell Helen that you are Jack Deane, an old friend of mine from the West whom I particularly want her to meet." She smiled her crinkly, alluring smile and Doctor Gavin fell for it without hesitation.

"I'm sorry I wasn't about at the time Tom was courting you," he laughed. "He wouldn't have stood a chance."

Grace blushed. "Wait until you see" she laughed did wait and with fear and trembling made his entrance as Jack Deane. Fortunately, he had a bit of a cold and his voice was sufficiently unlike Doctor Gavin's to deceive Helen completely.

Helen most certainly was all any man could expect from the feminine world. Her hair was softly brown, here eyes wide and intelligent and her gown exquisite. Also her laugh was contagious. Doctor Gavin found himself hurriedly and precipitately falling in love.

And Helen liked the friend from the West even though her ear was keyed to each footstep in the hall. She somehow felt disappointed that the doctor made no real attempt to know her.

She turned suddenly toward the doctor.

"What part of the West do you come from?" she asked.

Not being prepared he took a random shot.

"Cedar Rapids, Iowa," he lied beautifully, never having even passed through the charming mid-West city.

"No! Really! Grace didn't tell me that. I was born there."

And then the doctor was in for it properly. Such a volley of questions and inquiries and so flat and disappointing were the answers that followed that Helen was more than a little suspicious that he had never seen the word Cedar Rapids printed even. She turned from him a trifle annoyed.

The doctor was in a fine position for a man who has just decided that he has met the only girl and looked around desperately for re-

Suddenly a telephone bell rang and rang.

Helen heard it and her heart fluttered. Tom looked worried, Grace startled and only Doctor Gavin seemed pleased.

"If you'll excuse me—I must answer my phone—might be an important call—like some others of recent date."

He slipped out before a word was spoken.

"Grace! How could you?" Helen burst forth. "You said he was dark and short and had a mustache, and he's sandy and wonderfully built and, and—" but Helen stopped and blushed. "Anyway, I like him—so there."

"I knew you would," laughed Grace, and Tom wore a disgusted look. He knew that the women folks were up to matchmaking and couldn't let a poor, harmless doctor alone to be happy.

And on the way home in the doctor's cozy coupe Helen said with an unsteady laugh, "I have given you a good deal of trouble, doctor, by having made that mistake."

"Yes, and you will have to give me more than trouble before our accounts are straightened out. I—I—"

"We have only met tonight," warned Helen, but her voice held more of enticement to continue than she was quite aware of.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

MAKE HIT IN PERU

American Jackies Thoroughly at Home in Lima, the Capital.

Cafe Managers Find It Saves Trouble to Have Bill Agree With Menu Prices and Change Correct.

Calla.—A strange language, a still more puzzling currency and exchange rate and a strike of chauffeurs and coach drivers during the Atlantic fleet's visit to Peru did not prevent American sailors from filtering into every nook and cranny of Lima, seven miles from this port, from the humblest saloon to the cathedral.

They may have lost a little in exchange or paid more for a meal than the average Peruvian, but the smiling storekeeper and cafe manager found it saved them time and trouble to have their bill agree with menu prices and their change correct. For instance:

In one of the best hotels a tanned bos'un called for the bill for himself and three companions.

"No," he declared, "it's too much," as the waiter laid down a bit of paper with a column of figures on it.

"How do you know it's too much; you haven't looked at it yet?" one of his friends remonstrated.

"It's always too much the first time," the bos'un replied without moving his hand from the pile of Peruvian currency he had placed on the table. "I've been in France, and I know."

A long argument ensued in English by the sailor and Spanish by the waiter.

The head waiter came, tried his ten words of English and also beat a retreat, to be replaced by the manager of the hotel.

"Look here," said the bos'un after ascertaining that the manager understood him, more or less. "That waiter tried to gyp us. He said we owed twelve of these cigarette papers (pointing to a Peruvian sol, worth about 45 cents). I figured it up from the menu, and we only owe eight. How about it?"

The manager glanced at the bill and then at the bos'un. "All right," he said, and bowed the four out.

"What did I tell you?" were the last words of the bos'un as he reached the street.

The navy's "Four N" yell echoed for the first time from the high, vaulted ceilings of the aristocratic National club of Lima during the visit of the Atlantic fleet and created a scene seldom equaled in that magnificent relic of the Spanish occupation.

Following a reception and banquet, Peruvian orators excelled themselves in expressing their best wishes for the Atlantic fleet and the United States in concluding his eloquent response, Vice Admiral H. P. Jones suggested a navy yell.

"Give them the four N's, with one navy and three Lima's, the leader shouted, and then led a cheer that shook the building. The sight of a gold-braided, whirling dervish spinning and leaping in perfect time to a thundering, rhythmic cheer, brought every member of the club to his feet, and the flushed junior officer was carried around the hall on the shoulders of gray-haired notables.

STEAL HER LINGERIE

Mrs. Gaby Ma. Barry of New York, who reported to the police that she had been robbed of $3,000 worth of wearing apparel during a brief absence from her apartment on Saturday. The burglars left several thousand dollars worth of jewelry, but failed to overlook anything in the way of lingerie, Mrs. Barry said.

"This is too much for me," she said. "I'm going back to Brooklyn where I was raised."

Woman Kills Wolf With Ax.

Groton, S. D.—Mrs. Bert Fetters, a farmer's wife, armed with an ax, won a fight with a large gray wolf, when she cornered the animal in a hog house and killed it. A dog pack had been fatigued when she joined the chase. The pelt is valued highly.

Operated While Children Played.

Louisville.—A boy and a girl, five and four years old, respectively, played burglar with two real bandits, whom they thought masked especially for the occasion, while a third and unmasked robber held up their father, S. G. Gordon, a grocer.

Teacher Kills Huge Bear.

Chico, Cal.—A flirtatiously inclined cinnamon bear failed to make a hit when he paraded around the little "red school house" of Salad Valley, Siskiyou county, presided over by Schoolmarm Gladys Westlein, nineteen years of age. Miss Westlein organized a hunting party, traced Bruin to his lair and killed him with a shot from her rifle. Now Bruin graces the floor of Miss Westlein's home here as a handsome rug.

INDIAN WOMEN SEEK VOTE

Penobscot Squaws Demand Share in Tribal Elections and Conduct of Affairs.

Old Town, Me.—Indian women of the Penobscot tribe started on the warpath to obtain the right to vote in the tribal elections and share in the conduct of reservation affairs. Already some forward-looking squaws have nailed the suffrage colors to the figurative totem pole, with the assertion that a grand lady Sachem would make a wiser chief than any brave that ever wove a basket or built a canoe.

The new women of an ancient people began rejoicing recently when they received a ruling from Attorney General Shaw that they could go as far as the tribe allowed, for the state would remain neutral. He said the tribal suffrage was entirely a matter for domestic adjustment. The ruling was in answer to a letter received by the governor from Mrs. Peter Nicolar of Old Town.

Library in Chief Town of the Fiji Islands That Was Remarkable in Many Ways.

Perched up on the sixth floor of a Manhattan apartment house I cast my mind back over my wanderings of the past few years and recall various libraries that I have known.

For sheer grotesquerie, the palm belongs to a library in Suva, chief town of the Fiji Islands. It was a little, low, wooden building and was open only three evenings a week. You walked to it by way of Victoria parade, a broad acacia-shaded boulevard which skirted the waterfront, passing Fijians with their elaborate high coiffure and spindlelegged Hindus toting the inevitable umbrella.

In the reading room sundry of the European or Australasian inhabitants, arrayed in white duck, sat about reading by the flickering light of oil lamps ancient copies of Punch and the Illustrated London News. The books were as old as the magazines. I once asked the librarian what he had in the way of late literature, and he suggested Darwin's "Origin of Species."

Such books as were available, moreover, had suffered considerably from the attacks of the white ant, which had industriously bored through the pages.

The librarian himself was so old that if he had claimed Homer as a contemporary it would have been quite credible. A dignified dowager would occasionally arrive with a Fijian "boy" in tow. The native hung respectfully outside until the dowager emerged with a few books, which she handed to him.—New York Times.

BALK AT ACTING ON SUNDAY

London Theatrical Folk Overwhelmingly Vote Down Proposal for Sabbath Shows.

London.—British actors and actresses have no desire to emulate players in America by giving Sunday theatrical performances. A proposal to open London theaters on Sundays has just been voted down by an overwhelming majority at a meeting organized by the British Drama league. Most of those who voted were members of the theatrical profession.

The suggestion that plays be given on Sunday was made by Arthur Bourchier, an actor, and Father Adderley, a socialist.

George Bernard Shaw began by supporting the proposal with extraordinary enthusiasm in his capacity of playwright who wanted to make money out of his plays and ended by condemning it with even greater fervor as a "friend of the actor."

Flameproof Motors.

Experiments have been under way in England with a view to finding a means of protecting motors and other electrical equipment with a form of enclosure which, although affording a vent to relieve the force of an internal explosion, would not communicate a flame to the outside. Results have been obtained by flange, gauze and plate projection, but it appears that further research is necessary before there is conclusive evidence that any particular design can be relied upon to produce complete protection. There is a genuine demand for a flameproof motor in modern coal mining operations, in chemical works and in motion picture laboratories where vast masses of highly inflammable film are imperilled by the proximity of unprotected motors.—Scientific American.

Prior's got a "Mollie" cat, a dandy, so they say,
That loafs around his hardware store and scars the mice away.
But here of late, some other matters troubled "Mollie's" mind,
She's been a-hustling all around some quiet nook to find.

A Caloric furnace looked quite good, but that would be too hot,
And then a keg o' nails she tried, that rested near the spot.
But after searching diligently with unabeting hope,
She neatly wadded up herself in a coil of half-inch rope.

Well, to make the story short, we'll tell it to your face,
If you'll go to Prior's Hardware Store and look in "Mollie's" place
You'll see the very reason why she now so closely sticks,
For what was ONE the other day has multiplied to SIX.

Class No. 26 of Glenwood M. E. Sunday School, composed of 26 girls, with their teacher, Miss Six, enjoyed a covered dish supper at the church Tuesday evening. All ate to their hearts content (and a little more), as it was necessary to play games before they could finish their meal of cake, pie and fruit salad. Again games were played, one of the greatest being "The Kitchen Band." The most interesting feature of the evening being a wedding drill, Miss Six as bride and Miss Shangly as groom. The rest sang beautiful songs. At 9 o'clock all departed for their homes. They expressed themselves as having a delightful time.

The May meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of West Broad Street School, will be held at the school, Friday, May 13th, at 6:30 p. m., when the association will sit down to a big picnic supper. Parents, having no one to leave their children with at home are cordially invited to bring them as all arrangements have been made for them to be cared for at the school building. Members please remember the date, May 13th, and don't let any thing interfere with your being present at this supper. Mrs. J. C. CLOSE, Sec'y.

The Highland Avenue Parent-Teacher Association, to be held next week will be in charge of Mrs. A. H. Kitchin, who formerly was with the Home Economics Department of the University of Michigan . Mrs. Kitchin will make and demonstrate, an inexpensive paper dressform at this meeting, Thursday, April 28th, at 2:30. Tea will be served. You are invited.

MRS. SHARP, Pres.

Mr. Jacob F. Sackman, born at Rudolph, Germany, Feb. 16, 1832, passed away at his late home, 40 N. Warren Ave., April 16, 1921, aged 89 years and 2 months, from the infirmities of age. He immugrated to America in 1852, settling at Eden, Ill. He came to Columbus in 1884, and has lived on the Hilltop for about 16 years. He was a veteran of the Civil War, enlisting at Caseyville, Ill., in Co. 1, 22nd I. V. I., June 28, 1861, but was discharged because of disability the following Nov. at Birdsport, Mo.

He was born and reared in the Lutheran faith. He was a lover of nature and children and was a familiar figure in the vicinity where he lived making many trips to the country, always returning with something secured from the vegetable life.

On April 4, 1859, he was married to Catherine E. Klein, who preceded him to the Great Beyond, Aug. 10, 1900. To this union was born eight children, three of whom survive, Miss Magdalena, Mrs. Ella Stalter and Mrs. Louise Schneider, one grandson, William Stalter, and one granddaughter, Lucille Schneider.

Funeral services were conducted at the home of Mrs. Schneider, 22 N. Ogden Ave., by Rev. Averitt, Hildreth Baptist pastor, under the auspices of the G. A. R. Burial at Green Lawn Cemetery.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in the home,
Which never can be filled.
God in His wisdom has recalled
The boon his love has given,
And though his body slumbers here
His soul is safe in Heaven.

No Building Boom — Bonds Yield 8 Per Cent. Property Only a Tangible Object for Taxation. Spending and Producing.

Referring to the "building boom." There are none; it is not lagging because it has never started.

The building trades and the building supply dealers are partly responsible for it. In 1919-20 the owner could afford to take a risk now and then, because of big immediate profits; now, there is no such luck; yet, those who must live by his branch of industry stroll along, their heads in a cloud of past events while their feet shuffle and trip over the ever present needs.

So long as industrial and railway stocks and bonds can be bought so as to yield seven and eight per cent and war bonds six per cent and better, and nothing more promising for rental property than furnishing a tangible object for taxation and intangible returns—just so long will the building trades mark time.

It takes no expert in mathematics to figure this out; a bricklayer getting $10.00 for eight hours work and laying a maximum of 1000 brick per day against a former fair days work of 2500; by this process, making the cost for this man, as compared to pre-war service $25.00 per day. And this is not all—the man who waits upon the bricklayer works harder to kill time so as to make his job fit that of the man on the wall, adding to the cost and deducting from the service.

I only name one line but the practice covers all lines. Double pay and better and worse than fifty per cent less value; all of this force the supply and furnishing lumber people to pay the same high rates for their class of labor and for the same class of service; consequently, they can offer no inducement to the owner and so on down the line; the average contractor has given ground until his back is against the wall; his overhead and margin of profit that he was wont to figure on have vanished. However much he may give he cannot alone bring about a restoration of building; labor cannot do much simply by dropping a dollar or so per day from their pay, there must be a full days work—a man's days work in every branch of the business; it must come or its the bread line.

Spending on High and Producing on Third

To the thinking man it is so ridiculously plain that it seems utterly foolish to write it all down. We have "loafed" on our job, to the end of a foolish dream; we either wake up to the knowledge that we must work; work as hard as we ever did or we shall really and truly know want in this, the greatest country in the world. Spending at high and producing on third has but one terminal—the dump.

We are trying to lift ourselves by our shoestrings. It can't be done; when we get it into our heads good and proper that the riotous days of wage without work is past and get it into our hearts that however lowly the work, it is necessary and that as honest men, we must not only do it well but as much of it as humanly possible, always with a decent regard for our well being, then and then only we will begin to live the natural American life of peace and plenty to the honest worker and we are all workers.

The per cent of "loafers" is small, should be and will be smaller when we come to look upon this class as we would look upon a boil on the neck of the other fellow—not at all desirable.

D. L. BOYER, Builder.

C. W. Peters, an inmate of the State Hospital, was instantly killed last Saturday afternoon by an eastbound street car at Broad St. and Whitethorne Ave. It is said he stood on the north track till the approaching car from the west was near him, then he stepped right into the middle of the south track in front of the car and sat down. The motorman made a great effort to stop the car but could not in time to avoid hitting the man. From all appearance, he seemed bent on suicide. He was about 70 years old.

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to our many friends for their kindness and tokens of esteem shown us at the time of the bereavement of our dear father, J. F. Sackman.

House Cleaning a Pleasure

This Sweeper, the best money can buy, will be your servant, and save all the backaches resulting from cleaning. Use it once a week and your rugs will be clean, and have added life to them.

All the electric power is in the suction while the big brush runs naturally, like a carpet sweeper.

This fundamental principle of right cleaning means two things to you. First, the air suction is so powerful that it draws up all the dirt. Second, the big, revolving brush picks up all the litter thoroughly, without pounding and breaking the nap of your rugs.

INTOLERANCE

Probably there exists no greater restrictive and retarding force against human progress and wholesome growth, than is the spirit of intolerance in the hearts of well meaning and religious people. This spirit is wholly human and age-old in its existence. We have the Biblical instance where Jesus was waited upon by a party of his disciples who made complaint that they had discovered a man who was healing in the name of Jesus but who had not identified himself with their particular group. Jesus replied in his characteristic, meaningful and laconic manner, in words that stand not only as a rebuke to his disciples at that time but also to all those since who have been intolerable of good works from their own organization, "Forbid him not, for he that is not against you, is for you." It is evident from this that Jesus in his love for mankind smiled upon all movements conforming to his own high principles and having the good of his fellowmen in view.

The spirit of intolerance among those who should have the good of mankind most at heart, namely Christian people, is restrictive, because it prevents them from laying hold of every good and worthy means of educating and enlightening those about them so that the wonderful truths of nature and of God may be made known, comprehended, and appreciated. It makes them blind to the good in other persons and institutions. It prevents, not only these instrumentalities from being used constructively for good, but permits them to be used for wholly selfish and evil purposes. It hampers progress and preaches a righteousness by a system of negations. Whereas, if every means extant, which might be used for the education and elevation of man, were fostered and made use of by the good people the cause of Christianity would be thereby greatly advanced. The evangelization of the world to Christianity means the utilization of all good and wholesome agencies, spiritual and material by sub-ordinating the material to the spiritual, as is altogether filling. No permanent victory will come through a spirit of aloofness.

The writer does not mean that the Christian, is to surrender anything of his faith, or virtue or integrity or compromise his high ideals or lose anything of his vision of his ultimate high destiny in his contact with these agencies so often and erroneously termed "The devices of the Devil," but does insist that this world and its agencies, its wealth and its splendor are God's and not the Devil's and that we are not only to consecrate our lives to Him but we are to consecrate our possessions to Him and use every means within our power and reach to the up-building of his kingdom here and to the incorporation of Christ's doctrine of love and service in the hearts of men. It is only when the good people avail themselves of all these agencies and instrumentalities and use them in the promulgation of the Christian idea, that it can be said of them that "They are as a light set upon a hill."

The writer has heard criticism, of the most prejudiced and fervid type, of the Chautauqua and its work, alleging that it is not spiritual. It seems that this sort of criticism is wholly unwarranted. To my certain knowledge, some of the most fervent and religious presentations have been heard from the Chautauqua platform At any rate, any agency or organization that is responsible for so wide a dissemination of knowledge and truth, is worthy of the best co-operation and support.

JAPS LOSE MILLION

Census of 1920 Shows Big Decrease in Population.

Practically Every City Shows a Big Drop as Compared With Incorrect Figures of 1918.

Tokyo, — Population figures that prove the population of the Japanese empire over 1,000,000 less than it was estimated in 1918 were given out by the bureau of national power investigation here recently. Practically every city shows a large decrease as compared with the incorrect figures of 1918, Tokyo alone being 100,000 less than its semi-official figures indicated.

The population of the empire, according to these figures, which are the result of months of labor on the part of the bureau officials, is 77,005,510; that of Japan proper, exclusive of Korea, Formosa and Saghalien, 55,961,140.

Both of these figures are less by more than a million than the figures given in 1918. The population of the empire, then estimated from a compilation of old registers, was given at 78,261,856, or 1,235,346 more than the census of 1920 gives. The decrease for the Japanese empire, therefore, is 1.6 per cent.

Thus Japan, by its first modern census, for the 1920 figures are the first made along modern lines of investigation, fails to bear out its story of ever increasing population which is literally driving the nation to seek new lands in Asia and send its immigrants out into the far corners of the earth.

Since the fall of the Tokugawas it has been customary to compile all census records from old registers and it has been known for some time that duplications were not only apt to creep in, but that they had come to be the customary thing.

According to the new figures, there are 128,850 more males than females in Japan proper. The total number of families in Japan proper is 11,222,-(XX).

Tokyo, Osaka and Kobe rank the first three cities of the empire in the list of statistics.

Real Bargain Days for the Man Who Builds

Rents are high as ever, yet lumber and building materials have come down with a crash.

In many cases our prices are 40 percent lower than those of a year ago.

For the man who plans to build, repair, or remodel, this is certainly a favorable time.

The country as a whole is four years behind in its building program. Our own city needs Hundreds of homes to bring conditions back to normal.

People must build, soon, and increased building is sure to bring higher prices. The present situation is the result of forced selling by manufacturers who are overstocked.

These manufacturers were caught by the lull in buying and they must convert their stocks into ready money. In many cases they are selling at cost. When building begins again they will be quick to ask their legitimate profits once more.

We have a big stock of building materials, including all kinds of lumber, Reynolds Roofing, Sheetrock and Beaver Board, which we secured at favorable prices and which we sell at a bargain.

Take advantage of the opportunity. Come in and see us today

How Ma's Cooking Saved the Day

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"She's as good as gold, when you come to know her, but her manners—I don't see how ever we will stand them!" Truitte's wife said to her next-flat neighbor in a deep blue tone that was betwixt rebellion and resignation.

"Bossy or quarrelsome?" asked the neighbor. "John's mother is that sort—I just won't put up with her."

"No, no," Mrs. Truitte interrupted. "A bas-laigh has got nothing on ma for peaceableness. But—she's so awfully friendly—she'll try to neighbor with everybody—from the janitor to those studio-grandees up at the top. I don't believe she sees any difference in folks so long as they have eyes, ears and a soul. And she's like molasses—seeping in through the 'least little crack, ready to be seeped in on herself. And helpful—don't mind setting her hand to anything whatever. Once she took home a clothes basket of laundry because it was too big and heavy for the boy who was trying to carry it. The Glennon's laundry at that—they are the big-rich folks of our home town.

"The footman laughed in her face—she never would tell what she said to him—but afterward the Glennons looked out for their washerwoman—so I didn't mind so much—everybody there knew ma—here she'll be lost and strange as a cat in a new garret. I don't want people to look down on her—and we can't afford to have them look down on us, because of her, with Henry junior partner, and not yet quite used to it, and us beginning to know the nicest sort of people."

"I see!" The neighbor's tone was acid—her mouth shut with a snap. Evidently here was a case for waitful watching—those uppish Truittes were due to get their come-uppance—and likely to get it good and hard. Serve them right, too. But the ex...ous wrinkles had been smoothed from her tongue as she said over her shoulder: "I'll come in real soon to see her—maybe I can be some help to you."

A futile promise, kept as to ... coming in, but no more. Ma's friendliness was proof against advice, insinuation, even mild raillery. She made extremes meet by yanking a cent from the throat of the janitor's baby, and capturing and returning a parrot escaped from the biggest studio, which after sidling through an open door, made up its mind to waddle down two flights of stairs, then give its imitation of a squalling baby right at the Truitte's door.

Young Mrs. Truitte was out, else the bird would have gone back by way of the elevator boy with the captor's compliments—Mrs. Bessie was simply aching to make touch with its owners. That was impossible now that ma had obeyed the bird's order to "Sit down! down! and behave" in the very middle of afternoon tea. She had further refused tea, but said mildly: "I'd not bat my eye over a taste of that enticin' rum."

Ma yearned over every baby in the apartment house, but dared not take them out, in fear equally of autos and kidnapers. But she made herself so free in eager kindnesses, Bessie could not writhe under the indifference or the scarcely veiled amusement of their receivers. She felt as though her walls were of glass, with those about her peeping derisively through them. Yet she could not complain—Henry loved his mother devotedly, as became an only child, and chuckled over some of the happenings that brought his wife to angry tears.

To Bessie's amazement ma, the helpful, did not meddle the least in house hold affairs. Unasked she did not go near the kitchen, though always ready to lend a hand at need to the smart and rather pert maid-of-all-work.

With wages what they were Bessie had restrained from getting a second girl, thinking after ma's advent Lena would have time for black frocks, white aprons, and serving tea to callers. Naturally she was disappointed—she would have been nearly angry had she known that Henry had said as he fetched home his mother: "Remember—you're to be a queen, not a servant in my house, Mumy darling. And—wait to be asked before you put in your oar."

Henry loved his wife dearly—but he had, you see, a judicial mind. He must make his mother happy—she would not be so unless she were absolutely free. Hence he stood guard over her freedom, rejoicing to find her beaming. Even when Bessie complained at last that she didn't know what in the world to make of it—ma had been away a whole afternoon, from luncheon until ever so late, without saying a word as to why and where—and that now for a month she had made other mysterious disappearances three or four times a week. No—she had not been with any of the neighbors, nor running errands, nor cooking for the sick families in care of the church. Indeed there was such wonder all about as to where she could be, and what she could be doing, Henry must really look into the matter. Henry nodded, saying he would take it under advisement—but truth to say lost no sleep over it.

He was happily mystified to be retained next morning, individually, at a fee that took his breath, by Harley Griswold, clubman, sportsman multimillionaire, in what promised to be a celebrated case. Further, he was asked deferentially if he could come to Griswold's office, and lunch with him later. He went—after pinching himself to be sure he was awake, but in a daze as to how it had all come about.

Griswold, slim, tall, graying, fresh-faced but hawk-featured, had the name of being impassive—but he met young Truitte halfway the room, shook hands with him warmly and said before they were seated: "I'm glad 'my boy Henry' seems up to specifications."

Henry gasped. "You can't know my mother!" Griswold leaned to pat his knee, saying: "But I do. Man—I also love her. So does my girl. She—saved us from shipwreck," a touch of huskiness in his throat, "by the power of a good heart—too good to be afraid—of anything."

Later he explained that his wife had been present when ma took back the errant parrot—that they had gone away together—that next week ma had called in an acute domestic crisis—an important dinner on—servants all gone but the butler and madame's maid, and no help available at any of the agencies. Ma had risen to the occasion—cooked, not the dinner scheduled, but one of her own ordering, simplifying all things so delightfully the serving of them was but play—and sending the guests away so well fed they could not even think scandal. Later on she had come to teach Elizabeth the essentials of her own fine housewifery. And in doing that she had done much more—won the lonely heart of a rich and restless girl, and by example, not preachment, made her see the worth and the beauty of love and service. "Help what you can, and trust the good Lord," had been the burden of her homely recitals. "And henceforth we shall be trying to do it every way and everywhere."

Griswold ended: "We want you to help us in the helping, and let us adopt ma. If we can make you any return, name it!" Henry blushed a bit but answered: "All I ask is to have you tell all this over to my wife."

ARSON RING FORMED IN CHURCH—FIRE PLOT ON HILLTOP REVEALED

In the basement of St. Paul's United Evangelical Church, Monday night, plans were revealed of a monstrous conflagration which is to be spread throughout the entire business and residence section of the Hilltop and even into the downtown business district. A hundred members of this Arson Ring are already scattering fuel with which to kindle this huge blaze. Many individual members of the committees of which this Arson Ring is composed have already disposed of their entire quota of kindling and are now working to establish a record for their team.

"Add fuel to the fire" is the battle cry under which these ardent workers have rallied in a determined effort to burn the mortgage against the "Little Brick Church on the Hill."

A stick of wood for this fire costs $5.00 and the purchaser is assured of $5.00 worth of fun at the jubilee and bonfire which will be held in celebration of this event on the night of Memorial Day.

From week to week a list of subscribers to this fund will be published in this paper. Below is a complete list of team members to date and captains representing St. Paul's Arson Ring. Any one wishing to add fuel to St. Paul's Church Mortgage Fire can obtain fire wood from any of these members.

"WEATHER MAN" MAKES GOOD

Bureau's Predictions Are Now Received With the Respect Which They Have Earned.

Laughing at the United States weather bureau is rapidly passing out of style, if the sport cannot already be said to have become a thing of the past.

Once upon a time nobody would believe what the "weather man" said. It was fashionable to laugh at the bureau's predictions, pleasantly ridicule its warnings and never fail to recount its failures at length.

Perhaps even in those days the weather bureau "hit it" a great deal more than it ever "missed it," but the misses became universal topics of conversation, whereas there were none to do the prophets' "hits" justice.

Even here in the national capital poking fun at the weather bureau reigned. But those days are past. It has at last dawned upon the average man, seemingly, that the bureau, with its latest scientific instruments, and its staff of men who have made a life work of this business, is in a better position to forecast weather than the ground hog.

It also is realized that if the Creator sends an unexpected air current swirling over a certain area the weather bureau cannot help it, for its predictions deal only with known conditions and conditions which it may reasonably expect.

Men and instruments can go no further than that.—Washington Star.

Social Stunts

The April meeting of the Glenwood Home Missionary Society was held at the church the evening of the 21st. The ladies had invited their husbands as guests. It was also the time for the annual mite box opening. The meeting was called to order with the President, Mrs. Bishop, in the chair. The devotions were led by Mrs. Kennedy. She chose for her Scripture reading the 19th chapter of Job and for the subject of her helpful remarks, a part of the 25th verse: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." She closed by reading an original poem on Gypsy Smith and Rev. Bowman closed this part of the service with prayer. There was a short business session of the Society. The reports given were not only interesting, but very encouraging. The Mite Box Secretary reported $180.00 to date, with a number of boxes still out.

The first number on the program was a solo by Master Charles Wesley Walton. He graciously responded with an encore. The audience was charmed not only by the splendid rendition of the songs, but by the pleasing personality of the soloist.

Miss Dorothy Hammerstein in her usual happy manner, gave a group of readings (a) Help to set the world rejoicing; (b) The Home Goal (the poet's description of an ideal home life) and one humorous selection, "Ma and the Auto."

Following this was the splendid playlet, "A Medical Clinic," put on by the Senior Queen Esther girls.

Those taking part were: Misses Florence Starkey (Dr. Adams); May Haas (nurse); Ada Walpole (maid). Patients: Cecile Six, Ethel Glick, Ruth Kimes, Verla Shafer, Lowie Mitchell, Doris Miles and Freda Shafer. Each girl did justice to her part.

A social hour with refreshments, followed. One hunderd and forty were present.

WARN OF VIENNA "WIDOWS"

Appeals Sent to Strangers in This Country Are Found to Be Fraudulent.

New York.—A warning against false appeals for charity directed to individuals in this country by "widows" in Vienna was sent out by the National Information Bureau, Inc., of 1 Madison avenue. The bureau has found that some of these pleas were identical in wording and that the same pictures of emaciated children were enclosed. Different addresses were given in Vienna, but it was the conclusion of the bureau that the letters were fraudulent.

These letters told of finding the address of the "American friend," of the pitiful circumstances of the family, and concluded with a blessing for an expected gift. In concluding its warning the bureau said:

"Through the European Relief Council, of which Herbert C. Hoover is chairman, food drafts can be bought and sent to needy individuals in Vienna who are known to American givers, or the council will use its discretion in distributing help to those who need it most."

KAISER TOLD WHO IS BOSS

Burgomaster of Doorn Resents Interference of Former War Lord With Movements of Citizens.

Paris.—The burgomaster at Doorn has just set the former kaiser right as to who is the boss around the Dutch retreat of the ex-war-lord, and it isn't Wilhelm, even though the latter may have formerly bossed the German empire.

Natives of Doorn and those who may visit the town are able to peek through the fence surrounding the kaiser's palace, as they walk by, and a number have been peeking of late. As the story goes, Wilhelm ordered his aid to tell loiterers to move on. The burgomaster heard about it and went straightway to the palace. He demanded to see the kaiser and was admitted. Then he proceeded to say:

"I have come to inform you that I, alone, am the burgomaster of Doorn, therefore, I, solely, control the circulation of my townsmen."

They Are Made Different

A Gibson Refrigerator is absolutely air tight. The special construction of the inner walls make it so.

First, you have the outer wall of oak which is TONGUED AND GROOVED, and a DOVETAIL CONSTRUCTION. This alone would insure air-tightness. Next comes a charcoal sheathing around the entire inside of the case, then mineral wool or asbestos; after this protection from the outside air comes a positive dead air space surrounded with glass. This space is one inch thick; and from there into the inside you have the same kind of walls you do from the outside in to the dead air space.

Even though you have your refrigerator on the back porch, the construction insures the box from weather-cracking or spreading apart.

The Chautauqua assembly this summer very probably will be held from July 16 to 22, inclusive. Edwin M. Whitney is to tour the Redpath circuit for the third time. Previously he has given "The Fortune Hunter," and "Turn to the Right" in Redpath Chautauqua towns. He is slated for the opening night. That famous light opera, "Pinafore," is to be offered by a company of 25 people, including competent and well trained principals, orchestra and chorus. Another play hit will be the "Nothing But the Truth," by the Keighley Players of New York City. Musically, the program is sure to please. In addition to the opera there will be an all-star concert program, featuring Irene Stolofsky, brilliant Polish violinist; Harold Proctor, California tenor, and William Janaushek, pianist. There will be a girls' orchestra, a mixed quartet and a "brass choir."

Eugene Laurant, one of the most spectacular magicians in the business, is to present his own company of mystifiers on Chautauqua's sixth night. Another unusual offering will be the scientific entertainment by Hilton I. Jones of Oklahoma.

Major Paul Ward, aviator, world traveler and unusual speaker, who has been touring Russia, Germany, Poland, France, England and other lands during the past winter, will return to America in time to lecture here during Chautauqua. Likewise, Marie Rose Lauier, of France, will return to this country in time for her sixth Redpath speaking tour.

Edward Amherst Ott, noted as one of the most earnest and convincing platform men of his generation, will give his celebrated "Victory" talk. Dr. Stephen A. Lloyd of Chicago, is another orator of unusual attainments, to be heard during the assembly.

The series of morning hour lectures will be continued this year, and some new diversions are promised in the children's department. Special badges will be issued to boys and girls buying Chautauqua season tickets from the local committee.

OPERATES ON BRAIN

Invalid Surgeon Removes Bullet From Head of Convict.

Propped Up in Invalid Chair Dr. Chapman Performs Successfully Rare Operation in Surgery.

Ossining, N. Y.—The rare operation of removing a bullet from a man's brain was successfully accomplished in Sing Sing prison hospital. A remarkable feature was that Dr. William L. Chapman of Brooklyn, who performed the work, was propped in an invalid chair.

The operation was an attempt to cure insanity in a prisoner.

The presence of two bullets in the brain was disclosed by X-ray, the one removed being imbedded almost two inches, while the other was lodged behind the right ear. When the first bullet had been extracted the other was found to be lodged solidly in the tissue. After a consultation it was decided not to touch it. The incision then was closed, and the patient regained consciousness.

The full operation lasted one hour. A piece of skull the size of a silver dollar first was removed, and into the aperture Dr. Chapman inserted his index finger gently, being careful not to rupture the brain tissue or draw blood. Deeper and deeper, with painful slowness, the surgeon probed until his finger came in contact with the bullet. Then the surgeon slowly worked his finger around and under the object, gradually forcing it through the tissue until it touched the side of the skull, and then half lifted, half pushed it, along the wall until it reached the opening, where it was taken out with forceps.

Electric irons repaired. Work called for and delivered. Walter Baker. Hilltop 1656. Call evening.

YOUTH TRISECTS ARC

18-Year-Old Massachusetts High School Boy Amazes Teachers.

His Work Proves Up Arithmetically and Geometric Proof Will Be Worked With Teachers' Assistance.

Lynn, Mass.—Arthur Rogers, a senior at Lynn Classic high school, eighteen years old, has solved three methods of trisecting an arc or angle, using only a straight edge and compass, professors at the school announced. The feat of Rogers has never been accomplished except with measuring instruments, and those who examined the youngster's work could find no flaw with it.

Although he has proved his work arithmetically, no proof has yet been discovered geometrically, and the mathematics teachers at the school will help Rogers to solve this.

Edwin Hoadley, teacher, believes the key will be found in the Pythagoras theorem; the square of the hypotheneuse of a right triangle is equal to the sum of the squares on the other two sides. In addition to trisecting an arc, Rogers has gone further by proving that he can divide the arc into any number of equal parts. Rogers demonstrated his discovery at the weekly meeting of the Mathematics club, and Instructor Arthur Lord, a Phi Delta Kappa man at Dartmouth, could find no error in the work.

Rogers' method simply and briefly outlined as follows: Starting with any arc, draw a chord. Using the chord as a diameter, describe a semicircle. Using half the chord as a radius, describe arcs from each end, cutting the semicircle into three equal parts. From the center of the circle of which the original arc is a sector, draw lines cutting the three trisectors of the second arc and the original arc is trisected. The whole theorem is based on "diamic symmetry," a comparatively recent discovery regarding arcs and angles.

Cheap Horses.

Los Angeles, Cal.—"Horses in Montana are selling for $1 per head," declared E. M. Gamble, a prominent Iowa farmer, who was a visitor in the city recently.

Mr. Gamble asserted that he had just traveled through Montana and that owners of ranches there had offered him horses for $1 each if he would take them out of the state. Due to high freight rates, the Montana ranchers cannot dispose of their stock, he said, and as there is no market in the Southwest the ranches have become overstocked with horses of from 900 to 1,300 pounds.

Hobos Heave Thankful Sigh When They Get Thirty Days Instead of Five Years.

SAY "JUSTICE AIN'T BLIND"

"Buffalo Ike's" Sportive Dispensation of Some $75,000, Gets Six Hobos Into Trouble—Barkeeper Finds "Old Hickory's" Eyes Crossed.

Chicago.—"Shoestring" Doyle and his five compadions heaved a thankful sigh as they gazed at the patched moonlight on the floor of the county jail.

For "Shoestring" and his mates only had 30 days to think of instead of five years—thanks to the ineffable hospitality of one "Buffalo Ike" and his sportive dispensation of some $75,000.

One morning recently "Shoestring" and his five partners, "Slim" Roach, "Blackie" Steps, "Spuds" Miller, "Dude" Smith, and "Texas" Ducrost, climbed wearily from the rods of a box car in one of lower Chicago's numerous freight yards.

Start Out to "Do the Town."

It wasn't warm that day, and Shoestring's shoes leaked as they plodded townward. They headed for the Hobo college for a feed. Then they got to Madison and Halsted.

"You see," they chorused later to Judge Landis, "we were standin' there givin' the town th' high sign and wishin' for a drink, w'en a feller comes along an' bumps into us.

"'Hello, Jack,' he sez to me. 'Want a drink?'

"Now, honestly, judge, them's no words to say to me on a cold day ain't I right?

"What did I say? I said. 'Sure—where is it?'

"Then what do you t'ink dat feller did? He pulled out two double handfuls of bills outa his pockets and he says: 'Whee! Looka me! I'm Buffalo Ike of Leadville, Colorado! I'm a wild wolf, an' I'm a-howlin'!' An' den he gives a handful of dem bills to me and my podners. They was $50 bills, too.

"Now dis feller was lit up some and us folks figgered it was time to beat it after we got th' jack, 'cause he might wanted it back. D'ya get me judge?

"Well," Shoestring continued, "we ducked aroun' th' block and when we seen he wasn't comin' we headed for a dump dat sells booze. In we went an' up to th' bar.

"We asked for booze and we got it. It had an awful kick—fer th' next thing I knew th' cops was shakin' me up."

But to interpolate:

"Shoestring" gave the bartender one of the $50 bills. Shoestring's appearance was far from prosperous—the bartender looked carefully at the bill.

"Old Hickory's" Eyes Crossed.

And behold—the face of Andrew ("Old Hickory") Jackson which looked back at him wasn't natural. "Old Hickory" had cross eyes. The bartender phoned Capt. Thomas I. Porter of the secret service, who speedily arrived.

Shoestring and his companions went to jail—the bills were counterfeit. But—

"We ain't counterfeiters, judge," the "Shoestring" appealed. "We didn't know the juck was queer. We're just the fall guys for 'Buffalo Ike,' dat's all. He give us dat juck—an' now we've got to stand th' stretch for it. It ain't fair, is it, judge?"

"W-e-l-l," drawled the judge, "I'll be easy on you fellows. Thirty days apiece!"

Out in the hallway the quintet grinned at each other:

"Ain't that a right guy?" jubilated "Shoestring." "There he mighta given us a fiver apiece and he hands out just 30 days. Ain't he th' best dogone judge in th' judiciary? I'll tell th' world he is."

"Justice ain't blind, is it?" one was heard to say.

BANDITS INFEST HOLY LAND

One of Outlaw Leaders Killed—Galilee District Police After Other Bandits.

Jerusalem.—Bandits have flourished in the holy land as well as in other parts of the world since the beginning of the war.

Abdul Hadi Kaha, notorious outlaw leader, who is said to have several murders to his credit, was shot and killed at Zichron Jaob recently, while attempting to escape arrest.

The Galilee district police, in cooperation with the authorities of Ajlun successfully attacked the Speitan section of Mudeira's gang of bandits at Karf Abil and captured several of them. Mudeira himself is a fugitive on the other side of the Jordan, and it is believed that his followers are scattered.

Here's a Tank That Can Walk, Float and Dive

Paris.—An amphibious tank was demonstrated to French naval and military authorities at Marseilles by its inventor, Leon Foenquin. The machine resembles the ordinary whippet tank except that it is propelled from the stern. After crossing trenches and climbing walls the tank entered water, cruised on the surface for a while, then dived and crawled ashore along the bottom. Gen. Monro and Admiral Beaussant witnessed the performance.

Kite Pulls Sled.

Birchwood, Wis.—Lester and Leslie Wallhovd, fourteen-year-old twins, have adopted a unique plan of taking sleigh rides by means of a hand sled and a large kite. In windy weather the boys fly the kite and attach the string to their sled. This idea follows the plan of a Barron flivver owner who pinces his machine on runners.

Bull Holds Up Freight Train.

York, Pa.—For nearly half an hour the other day a bull owned by Harry Billet, a farmer, held up a west-bound freight train on the Pennsylvania railroad. Efforts to pull the bull off the track by using mules were futile. It was finally pushed off with a heavy automobile truck.

Detroit, Mich.—Albert C. Malone was the victim of what is believed to be one of the meanest thefts perpetrated in Detroit in several months, when sneak thieves robbed him of his crutches while he stopped to adjust his tie at Seldon and Cass avenues.

Malone notified the police that after alighting from a bus to go to his home he stopped beside a church on the corner, placing his crutches against the side of the building.

Two men of about twenty years of age were standing on the corner and each grabbed one crutch and ran. The crutches had been purchased during the day at a downtown store and Malone was taking them home for the first time.

Bequeaths Wife Shilling to Buy Herself a Rope

London.—When the will of a man who died at St. Leonards was read recently it was found that he had left his wife "the sum of one shilling to enable her to buy a rope."

The story has recalled many similar wills probated here in other years. A Birmingham man left his son four-pence with which to purchase "a hempen cord or halter for the use of his (son's) dear wife, which I trust she may make use of without delay."

Spirit of Suicide Comes Back and Creates Great Excitement in Neighborhood.

IS VERY NOISY FOR SPOOK

Widow Forced to Seek Medical Treatment for Shattered Nerves—Brother-in-Law Has Encounter With Spirit and Falls Senseless.

Trenton, N. J.—Page Sir Oliver Lodge! The ghost of John Koch, suicide and would-be slayer of Theodore Opendaker, is walking. His widow has had to seek medical treatment for shattered nerves. His brother-in-law, Stephen Hannan, has been so upset that on one occasion he fell to the floor in a faint. The entire neighborhood of the Koch home is bordering on panic.

Koch shot himself several months ago after wounding Opendaker. The widow and her four small children have since continued to live at the family home with her brother, Hannan, and Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Cordwell.

Two weeks ago Mrs. Koch awoke with a scream and declared she had seen her husband's ghost. Other occupants of the house laughed at her, but the incident was repeated a few nights later.

Hannan then decided to sleep downstairs on a couch. Nothing happened for a night or two, but on Monday night the alleged ghost returned and made such a disturbance that everyone in the house was aroused.

Reckless With Lamps.

Hannan determined to stay awake the rest of the night. He sat near the kitchen door. Suddenly, he says, the latch began to move. As he sprang toward the door the latch became quiet. Turning to resume his seat, he found himself face to face with the form of his dead brother-in-law. Seizing a lighted oil lamp, he hurled it at the vision so forcefully that it hit and dented a wall. He threw a second lamp at the supposed ghost and then, shrieking, fell senseless.

Upon being revived he declared that the ghost had said:

"I will be back on Friday night at 12:45 o'clock. I will then leave for awhile, but I will return."

Friday night Hannan and Cordwell took positions on either side of the kitchen door, and when the latch began to dance they rushed to open it, only to find themselves looking at each other. Then they securely tied the latch. When it began to jiggle later on they inspected it and found the twine cleanly cut in several places.

Page Trenton Press Agent.

Mrs. Henry Blizzard and her daughter went to the kitchen and, together with the Cordwells, waited for the promised reappearance of the ghost. At 12:45 the latch again began to move, but no ghost was seen.

Last Saturday night Hannan went to his own room to sleep. Soon after midnight, he says, he and everyone else in the house were awakened by crashing sounds from the kitchen. Rushing to the first floor they found nothing disturbed.

Temporarily, at least, the Koch ghost has supplanted sixteen-year-old Dorothy Miller as the leading subject of local conversation. Miss Miller is the girl who offered to marry any man who would pay $1,000 for an operation her mother must undergo if she is to live.

Rutland, Vt.—Though all his internal organs are "on the wrong side," and he has tuberculosis, William Bowen of West Charleston, Vt., a patient at the Vermont sanitarium in Pittsford, is going to get well, say the doctors, to whom the man is an anatomical curiosity. X-ray pictures taken to ascertain the conditions of the lungs revealed the fact that his heart is on the right side of his chest, the stomach is misplaced, the liver on the left instead of the right side, and the appendix on the left.

THE LAW OF AVERAGES

A professor walked into his classom and presented to the view of his class, composed of thirty or more students, a small wooden rod of indefinite length. Each member of the class was called upon to give his or her estimate or approximation of the length of it, judging by the eye. A great divergence of opinion was shown in the wide range and variety of "answers" given, but the most singular thing of it all was that the averages of all proved to be the exact length of the stick.

Herein lies the principle of popular government. Somehow Providence operates through the minds of the masses and renders judgment from time to time through the will of the majority. Let those of a radical class or minority take heed. The great composite judgment of a mighty people is not to be lightly considered or easily brushed aside. The opinion of any one individual standing alone, which is not "backed up" and reinforced by the opinions of the many, is of little consequence when compared to the great composite opinion of the people as a whole. There is something majestic and invincible about a decision when rendered by the voice of one hundred million people. This decision may not always be for the best nor always right, but being the opinion of the majority arrived at "according to their best lights," the net result assumes the proportions of a mighty verdict and mandate, the fulfillment of which calls for the loyalty and cooperation of all those contributing to that decision. The very safety of a democratic form of government rests upon this plan. The people are willing to support and abide by a policy they themselves helped to formulate.

There is every reason to prove the opinions of the many, on common matters, are superior to those of the few. With all the prejudices and selfish viewpoints to which all humanity falls heir, the few are rendered incapable of judging for the many, but by combining and merging, by counteracting and neutralizing these divergent elements, an approximation of justice and right and equity is obtained. Like when the six blind men of Hindustan went to view the elephant, each had a distinct and individual conception of what the beast was like.

"While all were in the right,
They all were in the wrong."

But taking the sum total of their opinions, a very good description of the elephant was to be had.

Nor does this principle deny or conflict with the growth of the individual, but on the contrary, it encourages the growth and development of the individual. The triumph of free government has been and will continue to be the triumph of the individual through education, enlightenment and truth and through the individual the state and nation.

ROADS AID ARGENTINE COTTON

Industry Quadruples in Three Years, Due to Help Given Farmers by State Railways.

Buenos Aires.—The cotton industry in northern Argentina has quadrupled in importance in three years as a result of aid given to the farmers by the state railways.

In 1918-19 approximately 12,000 acres were planted, while the 1920-21 crop embraces an area of about 50,000 acres.

The crop yield is from 1,200 to 1,600 pounds per acre, according to statistics published by the railroads, one-third of which is fiber and the rest seed. A gin and a cotton-seed mill have been constructed to take care of the crop.

The problem of the Argentine cotton farmer is lack of labor for picking the crop. Attempts have been made to use machinery for this, but these have been reported as being only partially successful.

MINE FOR DATA ON LOST RACE

Mexican Government Sinking Shaft to Uncover Mysterious "City of Gods."

BUILDERS THOUGHT INDIANS

Immense Stores of Valuable Archeological Material Have Been Taken From the Various Excavations—To Make It Show Place.

San Juan de Teotihuacan, Mexico.—Prospecting for the habitations of a lost race in virtually the same manner as miners dig for gold, federal employees here have just started to uncover the remains of a city of at least 100,000 inhabitants which flourished four thousand or more years ago.

Here and there over the confines of the buried city have been sunk shafts to find streets, houses and temples known to exist below the level of the mountain valley in which lies the little village of San Juan Teotihuacan, the name of which means in the Aztec tongue "City of the Gods."

The Mexican government has appropriated funds for this work of excavation, which is in charge of Manuel Gamio, director of anthropology of the department of agriculture. The government hopes eventually to make the spot one of the show places of Mexico.

Dominating the area are two pyramids, one to the sun and the other to the moon, which for centuries have defied the efforts of archeologists and historians to trace their origin. The pyramid to the moon is still untouched, retaining an appearance to the lay eye of a huge mound of irregular shape, overgrown with grass and rubbish.

Builders Thought Indians.

Senor Gamio says the city now under excavation at one time covered an area of fifteen square miles with a population of more than 100,000. Its builders are unknown to history, but Senor Gamio believes they were a part of an Indian tribe which wandered into Mexico from the north, and finding the valley fruitful and the climate salubrious, decided to settle there.

The presence of volcanic rock as one of the top strata covering the ruins indicates that one of the nearby mountains erupted and inundated the city with lava.

Entry to the grounds is made facing the "Temple of the Goddess of the Winds," which was discovered less than a year ago, when erosion uncovered well-defined walls and decorations typically Indian and Egyptian in their conception. This temple has now been dug out and reconstructed on the exterior.

The inside is reached at present through a series of subterranean passages. Inside the visitor treads over massive stairs ornate with decorations of huge serpents with obsidian eyes and grotesque conceptions reminiscent of Egyptian art. The work of interior excavation and reconstruction is far from complete.

Paint Still Bright.

Between this temple and the pyramid to the sun is a stretch of one-quarter of a mile, which is at intervals pierced by the shafts of the diggers and in some places by the uncovered remains of a house or public building with the paint still bright and the frescoes as intact as the day they were placed there several thousands of years ago.

Between the two pyramids is a well-defined plaza, on one side of which a street has been uncovered, known as the "Path of the Dead." Flanking the plaza are hundreds of mounds, which Senor Gamio assured the correspondent contained either houses or temples.

Immense stores of valuable archeological material have been taken from the various excavations. Human bones, terra cotta beads, obsidian knives, arrowheads, children's toys of clay, cooking utensils, incense burners and crude musical instruments form the bulk of the find, and all are preserved in a museum which has just been erected on the grounds.

In connection with his supervision of the excavations, Senor Gamio has interested himself in the Indian life of the valley, and one of his first efforts has been to establish schools with special attention paid to manual training.

Originally the valley contained 200,000 Indians, but these had been reduced to 20,000 in colonial days, and now number fewer than 8,000. They earn but a poor living when crops are good, and when these are failures starvation and widespread death ensue.

Groups of Indians engaged in pottery making, a new industry in the valley, were evidence that a portion at least of Senor Gamio's program was being carried out.

The Rift in the Fog

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

In Fairhaven the season was drawing to a reluctant end. September had been a glorious month. Summer residents were lingering along, loth to leave. Huge woolsacks traveled majestically across the deep blue sky and were reflected in the waters beneath. Never were the sands of the beaches more dazzlingly white. From a mile out to seaward came the lazy ding-dong of a bell buoy. Orderly little waves lapped the shore as regularly as the ticking of a clock. It was the beauty of perfection that cannot last.

As the clerk in the office at the end of the long row of bathhouses looked up from his book long enough to hand Millicent Garrish a rubber band from which dangled a sizable key he remarked confidentially, "That's the only one out this afternoon and we close tonight for the season."

The sun was shining brightly when Millicent emerged from the bathhouse, but far out to sea a thick bank of mist was visible. The little stretch of public beach was deserted. There was no one to admire the slender, shapely figure revealed by the brown jersey bathing suit, as it ran down the sands and plunged into the water.

A hundred feet off shore floated a bathers' raft. With a long, easy overhand stroke Millicent made the distance in short order and, climbing the wooden ladder, seated herself on the canvas-covered floor, bare knees drawn up and hands clasped around them, looking straight out to sea. Now she could think.

There was not a boat in sight and the fog had already shut from view the outlying islands. With no details to distract one's thoughts the proposition should be an easy one, Millicent decided. She had only to imagine Gilbert Graham there beside her; and if the thought of his presence brought with it a thrill, if it made the water seem bluer and the clouds whiter, then the answer she had promised him that evening would be the one Gilbert had sought all summer.

Wisps of mist scudding on a light east wind, flew by. The parent bank of vapor drew closer to the shore. To the ceaseless song of the bell buoy was added the eerie bellow of a fog siren somewhere in the distance. And Millicent's imagination failed in materializing Gilbert Graham sitting there beside her on the raft. Of a sudden she realized why she was unable to conjure the picture. Gilbert disliked the sea. He did not even swim.

Then Millicent realized something else. The raft was hemmed in on all sides by the fog. The ding-dong of the bell buoy seemed to come from behind her now—and yet surely that was the shore side of the raft. Could she be confused in her sense of direction? Anyway, sounds were often deceptive in the fog; she knew that. It didn't matter anyway. What mattered was whether she really did love Gilbert Graham—or didn't.

But what was that new note, that steady undertone? Why, it couldn't be anything but the throb of powerful engines! That too seemed to come from the wrong direction, for there was not depth of water between the raft and the shore for any but a small boat. Whatever it might be was coming nearer. Perhaps the craft had lost its way and was in danger of going ashore!

Then abruptly the noise ceased—and of a sudden came a rift in the fog. Something huge and black loomed. A voice called, "We're right on it!" Then, close before Millicent's startled eyes, clearly outlined against the drop curtain of mist that obscured the rest of the craft as completely as though it did not exist, towered the prow of a big tug boat. And on it stood a man.

For the fraction of a minute these two, the man and the girl, stood alone in that rift in the fog before Millicent, abruptly turning, plunged into the water, just as the bow of the vessel touched the raft, and made straight for the shore. Yet they would have known each other in eternity.

Even as Millicent disappeared the man called to some one behind him, "There's a girl on her." As he spoke he jumped to the raft. But Millicent was already well on her way ashore.

The fog lifted as quickly as it had come and the man saw the slender figure emerge from the water and run up the beach. Millicent heard him call out, "She's all right."

As the girl gained the bathhouses the clerk called to her: "Came near to taking you along, didn't she? That's one of the Graham Wrecking company's tugs, come to take the raft away. Forgot to tell you."

Millicent dressed, drove her runabout home, dined and costumed herself for the last dance of the season at the clubhouse with a curious sense of elation. It was as though she saw everything about her through a mist and the only thing that stood out clearly was the figure of the man on the bow of the boat. Every detail of his appearance was stamped indelibly on her mind. He was an outdoor man—for the sun had tanned his skin and faded his khaki clothing to the same tan. It had even bleached his wavy hair in spots. His eyes were deep blue.

Afterward Millicent decided that she must have spent those hours in something resembling an hypnotic state—a walking dream. It lasted until Gilbert Graham led her determinedly out into the darkness of the club veranda after the first dance, and demanded his answer. Out at sea the fog was closing in and again the distant siren took up its muffled note of warning. Without realizing that she had never yet formulated a decision, Millicent's lips answered "No" to Gilbert's plea. The man she could love would love the sea; would sense the romance of work like that of the wrecking company Gilbert's father owned; would revel in the physical toil and risk of saving ships—human lives perhaps!"

"I see," interrupted Gilbert. "It's because I prefer to be treasurer of the concern rather than wear dirty khaki and do rough-neck work with the deckhands like—"

Millicent shivered. Her elation fell from her. It was that man on the prow of the tugboat—not as he probably was but as she had imagined him to be—whom she had been describing as the man she could love. Of course she would never see him again!

Gilbert observed the shiver and interrupted himself to say: "You're cold. Let us go in."

At the lighted doorway stood a man in white flannels, looking in. He was browned by the sun and his hair was burned lightish in spots.

"Hello, Paul! When did you show up?" Gilbert's tone was one of surprise, but it did not express much pleasure.

Not until Millicent, piloted by a strong brown hand on her arm, was half way down the walk that led from clubhouse to pier did she realize what the introduction had meant. Of course, this was that brother of Gilbert's who had charge of their New England branch. She hadn't dreamed—they didn't look in the least alike—

"Half brothers;" the man uncannily made answer to her unspoken thought. "You—you're the girl in the fog."

"Yes," answered Millicent. And that sense of elation came again, multiplied. For some note of finality in Paul Graham's voice assured her that they would always be together in a world of their own, as for that long moment they had been alone in the rift in the fog.

FIND TRACKS IN ASH

Shows Army Fled From Wrath of Volcano in Hawaii.

Exploring Party Find Footprints 130 Years Old in Desert South of the Crater of Pele Volcano.

Hilo, Island of Hawaii, T. H.—Footprints, 130 years old, of a Hawaiian army that fled from the wrath of Pele, goddess of the active volcano of Kilauea, near here, are believed to have been discovered in the Kau desert, south of the great crater, by Prof. T. A. Jagger, Jr., in charge of the volcano observatory.

Dr. Jagger and his party were exploring a region far removed from any of the known, modern trails when they came upon the area thickly covered with the imprint of naked feet, all pointing in the one direction, all deep at the toes and light at the heels, indicating that the makers of the tracks had been running at top speed.

The tracks originally had been made in volcanic ash, which is strongly impregnated with sulphurous acid and gypsum, and which when, wet by rain, settles into a hard concrete, thus explaining the preservation of the imprints for a period believed to have stretched over more than a century and a quarter.

Hawaiian legend and history provide the other side of the story, the connection between the Kau desert tracks and the flight of the army of Keoua, King of Kau, from Pele's wrath.

Keoua led an army of three divisions against King Kamehameha, who later united all the Hawaiian islands under his sway, in the year 1790. This year also recorded the last explosive eruption of Kilauea volcano. Hawaiian legend records the fact that some of Keoua's warriors rolled stones into Kilauea crater to mark their disrespect for the goddess of the molten lake. Whatever the reason for the outburst, Pele rose in her wrath, and with a terrible explosive eruption, totally wiped out the second division of Keoua's army.

The footprints found in the Kau desert are believed to be those of men of the first division, who seeing the destruction of their comrades in the rear, fled from the locality. The third division coming up, saw the bodies of the annihilated second and halted.

The area where the footprints were discovered is part of the new Kilauea national park, which will be dedicated this year, and steps already have been taken to inclose the tracks and preserve them.

PNEUMATIC CROWBAR

The Cincinnati Traction company is using a pneumatic crowbar to rip up all kinds of paving around the street car tracks when it becomes necessary to replace rails. One man with the air-driven tool can take the place of four men with ordinary picks. The point sinks through the hard pavement as though it were ordinary dirt, and in speeding up the operator can tear up a square yard of standard paving in less than three minutes.

RARELY FALLS ON SUNDAY

Fourth of March Said to Have Been Selected for Presidential Inauguration for That Reason.

The presidential inaugural ceremonies are held quadrennially on March 4, because the first Wednesday of March, 1789, was fixed by the old Continental congress as the day for commencing proceedings under the Constitution of the United States, that being the fourth of the month. This Constitution was adopted by the convention over which George Washington presided on September 17, 1789, and was to become effective on the acquiescence of nine of the thirteen original states. By July, 1788, ten of the states had ratified the Constitution, and September 13, 1788, the congress of the federation selected the first Wednesday in January for appointing electors, the first Wednesday in February for casting their votes and the first Wednesday in March for commencing proceedings.

Only four times in the entire 145 years since the United States became a separate nation has March 4, as inauguration day, fallen upon a Sunday. There is a story to the effect that this date was originally chosen as the commencement of the President's term because congress figured it up and found that the 4th of March was the one day in the year which, quadrennially would fall less frequently on Sunday.

Children Fed Ether to Beat H. C. of Eating

Westfield, Mass.—As the result of investigation by the school authorities, who learned that young children are receiving sugar lumps, soaked in ether, to reduce their appetites, Superintendent Chester D. Stiles took up the matter with state educational and health authorities.

Ether may be bought in any quantity by a child in any drug store. Children, when questioned, said that the ether was given them by their parents to lower the cost of living and also to quiet those who got boisterous.

His Viewpoint.

"In Kansas, where I live," said a tourist, "I know a dozen farmers who keep books the same as merchants, and can tell at any time exactly what it costs them to grow any particular crop."

"Eh-yah!" returned Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge, Ark. "I've heered of them fellers that work theirselves to death by 'rithmetic."—Country Gentleman.

DEAD MAN AT THE THROTTLE

Too Many Men Are in Principle Like the Lifeless Engineer in Charge of Train.

Not long ago, bumping over a network of frogs and switches, the limited express on a great transcontinental railway sped into the terminal station at a large city with the engineer dead at his post. He sat in his accustomed place; his sightless eyes were riveted on the track ahead of him; his nerveless fingers still gripped the throttle. So lifelike was his position that the fireman, who had become alarmed at the undiminished speed as they neared the station, shook him roughly before he realised that the man was dead. He shut off the steam and applied the brakes just in time to avert a terrible catastrophe.

A dead man at the throttle! How many calamities in life can be traced to men in a like condition! God has given each of us the charge of a wonderful machine—the human body with its complex mechanism through which act our physical, mental and moral forces. We are each an engineer, and each of us must drive his machine along the destined path between the eternities.

Many meet with catastrophies. We cannot always explain them, but how many times the cause is—a dead man at the throttle! He sits in his accustomed place with his eyes fixed on the track ahead, but he is dead nevertheless to all thought of moral or spiritual responsibility. There are helpless people on the track before him; there is a long train of unborn generations coming after him; but he does not see or think or feel.

It is one of the mystifying truths of life that a man can be outwardly alive although inwardly dead. His mind may be keen and his senses alert though he is dead in heart and soul. It would be better for the world if he were physically dead; for while he remains physically alive he is still an engineer in control of dangerous forces—forces that he cannot use with consideration for others or as He who intrusted him with them expected them to be used. The powers it was his duty to control are great; uncontrolled, they are a curse rather than a blessing. Ungoverned by principle and love of others, they are sure to bring tragedy and suffering to everyone in their path.—Youth's Companion.

Canned Tennis-Balls.

Dead tennis-balls are worse than useless. What makes a ball go dead? Atmospheric conditions very often. However, if tennis-balls are canned—hermetically sealed—when manufactured, they will be as good as new when opened.

This has been done recently in shipping tennis-balls to China. Heretofore the balls have lost much of their resiliency because of the long ocean voyage. But now, they are not affected by the journey.—Popular Science Monthly.

Not So Bad.

"I fear you are a confirmed pessimist, Mr. Gloom."

"Oh, no, Mrs. Clatter!" replied J. Fuller Gloom. "While I do not see anything but ruination for the next 4,000 years or so, after that I expect things to perk up quite a bit."—Kansas City Star.

TO POPULARIZE LATIN STUDY

To popularize the study of Latin at Wilson college, Chambersburg, Pa., the young women students recently held a "Roman banquet," at which they appeared as characters famed in the history of ancient Rome. The banquet was served in Roman style by "slaves," while the diners reclined on couches and rugs about the hall. The picture shows Miss Jean Sharp as she appeared as Nero at the banquet.

Turning Sewage Into Power.

From Australia comes a plan to generate a septic gas from the sewage of towns. The British ministry is investigating the claims of the inventor as to the yield from this source.

Analysis of the gas shows that on an average it consists of 60 per cent methane, 17 per cent nitrogen, 8 per cent hydrogen, 14 per cent carbon monoxide, and 1 per cent oxygen. Experts declare that there is no reason why, properly controlled, advantage should not be taken of the bacteriological action of sewage in septic tanks.

Tests made to determine the horsepower developed in engines resulted very successfully.—Popular Science Monthly.

Did She Give It to Him?

The young man's face was flushed, and his manner was strangely agitated.

"Miss Blanche," said he, "I hesitated about coming to you, but my feelings have overpowered me at last. Is it too much for me to ask——?"

"Go on," whispered the maiden, with heart beating wildly.

"I came to ask you, Miss Blanche—"

"Yes," she smiled, encouragingly.

"If you would give me that recipe which you said you had for indigestion?"

Still Worse.

"I have an announcement," Mary Higginson said to her employer, Judge Graves, the other day; "I'm going to marry Cecil Stone, the Poet."

"Then I suppose I shall have to look up another stenographer to take your place," said the judge.

"Not so as you can notice it," she answered. "But I shall have to ask for a substantial increase in wages."—Los Angeles Times.

Ah Sing's Chicken Dinners

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nick Rogers, mining engineer, came riding in from the mountains to his lonely shack in Peter Valley. Ah Sing, his Chinese cook, was grinning in the doorway, with a pail of hot water in one hand and clean towels dangling from the other.

Nick sniffed the air hungrily. "What have we got for dinner tonight?" he wanted to know.

"Schicken—chop suey—um—velly good—rice pudding, velly fine," grinned the cook as he went away with the horse, for he was hostler sometimes and cook most of the time.

"Chicken again?" groaned Nick, scrubbing vigorously away in the tent he had dedicated for use as a bathroom. "Miles from civilization, and while we keep no fowls, that heathen Chinese produces chicken five times a week. It's worth investigating."

Ah Sing came to toss pails of cold water over him in lieu of a shower bath, and so Nick curiously found vent in words. "Where do you get chickens?" he asked.

The cook flicked his talented fingers vaguely to the south and stopped further inquiry with a cold douche.

"Velly hot day," he smiled pleasantly.

"Get out of here!" commanded Nick, crossly, and he completed his toilet and went into dinner resolving to ferret out the chicken farm whence Ah Sing drew his supply of poultry. There was deer over in the blue hills district, but he had been too busy to go over there, and his companion, Billy Ware, had been called to a distant city by illness in his family. The supply of tinned meats had given out and lately it had been chicken four or five times a week and bacon on other days.

"What Have We Got for Dinner Tonight?"

"Velly glood dinner?" grinned the cook as Nick pushed back his chair.

"Fine. How much did you pay for chickens, Ah Sing? I must owe you some money."

"Ah—fiend mine—have velly much chickens."

"Sly old beggar that," muttered Dick as he lighted his pipe. "Wonder how any friends of his happen to be here in the wilds among the hoot owls and wild turkeys." He sauntered away from the camp, stopping at the spring for a drink of cold water. As he turned away he noticed a very narrow trail leading away through the long grass to the left. It was a faintly defined path, as if few people passed that way, for the ragweed and wild wheat were disturbed but not trodden. Another path led to the broad trail which crossed the base of the mountain and a third one led to Ah Sing's cabin hidden among the jumpers.

Nick swung about and went knee high in the wild growth that fringed the new trail. Back in the cabin Ah Sing was on his trembling knees praying to the "white man's joss," for he had seen Nick walking through the forbidden path, and he knew that a day of reckoning was close at hand.

The path led around a spur of the hills and dipped in and out of Peter Valley and finally ended in a great heap of broken bowlders, but two of the bowlders formed a gateway to a tiny valley, green and fertile, washed by the waters of Little Peter creek, and shaded by giant oaks and chestnuts. At the end of the path between the bowlders, was a roughly-constructed gate and sitting on the gate was a girl with a shotgun across her knees.

"Hands up!" she said crisply.

Nick obeyed promptly. "Nothing doing here—poor as a church mouse," he bantered.

She was a pretty girl, a mighty pretty girl, he decided, as he gave her look for hostile look. Her dark hair was pinned close to her shapely head and the color in her olive cheeks palpitated with her swift breathing. Her firm lips were vivid coral and her large, melting hazel eyes gave him a dizzy feeling. He had never found time to bother with girls, but it would never be a bother to gaze at this girl, she was so lovely. She wore khaki riding breeches and shirt and a red silk tie made a splash of color.

"Well?" she asked insolently.

"'Howdy, stranger,' is what we say around here," answered Nick mildly.

"I thought perhaps you were looking for chickens," she threw at him.

"Chickens?"

"Chickens!"

Nick looked at his pipe, rapped it on the rock and smiled oddly.

"Do you keep chickens here?" he asked.

"Keep them? You ought to know that we can't do that!" she blazed.

"What do I know about it?" he was beginning when he remembered.

Chicken four days a week and between times bacon!

"Do you mean to insinuate that I—steal your chickens?" he inquired.

Ah Sing's Chicken Dinners

"Your Chinaman does. We have missed them for weeks. I caught him red-handed yesterday."

"I am more sorry than I can say. I have been terribly busy for a couple of months and never questioned about his supplies—merely paid the bills. I honestly didn't know there was a chicken house within fifty miles, but suddenly tonight I questioned my cook and he said they were a present from a friend, and I was so suspicious that I started out to find Ah Sing's friend, and here I am!"

"He has no friends here," she said in a milder tone. "You see, my father is here for his health, and he values the chickens—they are his hobby. I was really gunning for Ah Sing tonight!"

"Please don't harm him—he's a mighty good cook and we could never get another one, but I'll scare him—leave him to me! My partner and I are trying to locate the old Wizard Mine for John Ferriss & Co.——"

"John Ferriss is my father," she interrupted. "He told me about the mine yesterday; won't you come in and see him now? We had no idea that our chicken-loving neighbors were our own engineers!" She blushed deeply as she lowered the weapon. "It's safe now," she smiled.

"Safe?" Nick lowered his hands but as he followed her down the valley to the Ferriss camp he told himself that never was a simple, hard working bachelor in greater danger than when confronting those eyes, that smile—he was glad that Barry was a married man. "Hurray!" he chuckled insanely.

"Why are you so happy?" she wanted to know.

"No more chicken dinners!"

"You can come and fish here at the creek," she suggested.

"I'll do that," he said emphatically

* * * * * *

Late that night Ah Sing heard a strange rushing through the underbrush near the new trail. Then his employer broke into the cabin, his face radiant with some inner joy.

The terrified cook dodged behind the table and broke into shrill protestations. "No more schicken—never no more—heap solly, boss"—— His voice died away in a feeble shriek as his boss grasped his precious queue.

"No more chicken is right—we'll have fish!"

"Flish—him glood—you clatchee flish little cleek—sabe!" trembled Ah Sing.

Then, to his amazement, his boss caught his arms and danced him wildly about the cabin. "You shall dance at our wedding, Ah Sing," panted Nick, "so I'll begin to teach you now."

"Me sabe—no more schicken," droned Ah Sing as they whirled around.

GREATEST [illegible] TEACHERS

Civilization Looks Always to the Bible in the Hours of Prayer and of Peril.

The Bible is the Great Spirit of the white man's civilization. Our infidel or latitudinarian may reject it, but it is distilled in his blood. It is more than literature, more than the Book of the church, than history or theology. It is power. It is the essence in the character of our institutions, of the gentlemen and ladies we meet on the highway of progress. It endows low understandings with higher ideas than those of the uplift writers. It imparts a literary taste surpassing that of the authors of the best sellers. It brings more tremendous news than all the special editions of all the newspapers ever issued. The inquirer sees in it the character of free thought. The forward mind sees in it the compass for the course. The imaginative mind, resting on the far reaches of time, sees it flowering out in the tender and the beautiful, the strong and the great. It is the Great Progenitor.

The tongue of Moses gives voice to innumerable tongues. The sword of Joshua summons innumerable swords. The altar of Aaron splits into many altars. Its Psalms are the battle hymns of freedom. The magic of its wondrous words is in all our literature, were every Bible burnt. From this lamp the lamp of art was filled; from this fire the fire of science was kindled with a pagan fuel.

Looking back sixty centuries, we today are civilized; looking forward sixty centuries, we are savage. The Bible goes with us. If it is the Word of God, we shall not cast it down, if it is the work of man, we must not. We will look upon it in the hour of prayer and the hour of peril. We cannot forget. But the solicitude of high-souled teachers cannot call back the audience—that audience filing toward the tombs of its fathers, children still, after so many ages; ignorant yet, after so much wisdom.—Leslie's.

Lithuania Awarded Seaport.

Lithuania now has direct access to the sea for the first time in her history, according to an official cable dispatch to the Lithuanian headquarters at Chicago. This was brought about by the Lithuanian-Latvian boundary commission's award of the seaport of Palanga, along with 20 kilometers of seacoast on the Baltic, to Lithuania, the dispatch explains. The accession of the Palanga district was celebrated by the population, which is of Lithuanian blood, on April 2.

Swiss Glaciers Running Thin.

The drought in Switzerland is very unusual and is disturbing the economic balance, for navigation on the lakes is almost suspended and the cattle have to be driven long distances to obtain water. Many glaciers have broken and the moraines or "glacier terminals" are far up the mountains. There is less snow now on the peaks than in the normal August when mountain climbing is at its apogee.—Scientific American.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Merch E. Swanson will read the following with interest:

Miami, Fla., May 5, 1921.

We are temporarily located very pleasantly in the north part of the city about two squares from Bay Biscayne. Miami is a beautiful city, and the climate is ideal. The warm sunshine being tempered by a cool breeze all the time. The trees and flowers are wonderful.

Cost of living will average about the same as at home. Some items being higher, others lower. Transportation is one of the problems now to be solved. Columbus people think they are paying a high car fare. Miami pays 10 cents, transportation being by licensed automobiles on a few of the streets. No transfer.

Have met a number of former Columbus people, now residents of Miami, all doing well and satisfied to stay here, and if our experience for the month we have been here is a fair sample of Miami, we have made no mistake and are well pleased.

Very truly yours,
M. E. SWANSON,
2235 N. E. 2nd Court.

Home Building

The Hilltop is enjoying a wonderful growth this season.

There are at present nearly a hundred houses under construction, and the prospects are good for many more.

Builders report sales good and a number of inquiries, many of these homes being built by the owners themselves.

With high rents and the shortage of of houses, it behooves people to build now.

Almost all of the building is of the single house, modern home type, of a moderate price that will be sold direct to families, and not of the type of a house that rents. This assures the Hilltop a population that will be a credit to the community. People that own their own homes usually take more pride in the home and make it a credit to the community.

Children grow up in the same old place that they learn to call home and when they grow up look back with much joy to the old home, and generally become more substantial citizens.

With our good schools, churches, our paved streets and a class of citizens that can not be excelled anywhere, the Hilltop is without a doubt the best place in the city, it the best state in the best country, under the face of the sun.

The prices of building material are lower than they have been for several years and are possibly as low if not lower than they will be for some time to come.

The big lumber interests in the South claim that they can not produce lumber as cheap, as it is being sold at present, unless there is a reduction in labor and also in the freight rate, which is an accumulation of last years cutting, when there was very little house building going on.

The big reduction in the cost of building is in lumber, while it is gratifying to note, that other commodities that enter into home building have made some decline also, so that today it costs as much as 30 percent less than it did one year ago.

People are today investing their money in homes, and after all there is nothing just quite as safe as an investment in real estate. Stocks depreciate tremendously over night, and it is sometimes impossible to dispose of stocks at any price, while real estate is always of solid value, and seldom depreciates very much. It is always easy to dispose of.

Every citizen should before investing in stocks and bonds own a home. It is gratifying to know that the percentage of home owners is greater on the Hilltop than anywhere in the City of Columbus.

Deaths

Mr. Daniel Fleming, age 62 years, died of complications at his home, 2025 W. Broad Street, on Thursday, May 12th. He had been sick eighteen weeks. He had been in the service of the Columbus Fire Department for nearly 22 years, part of that time as Lieutenant. He opened No. 17 Engine House on the Hilltop in 1914, and served there till February 1st, 1920, when he was transferred to Truck No. 4 at No. 10 Engine House. He was a member of Humbolt Lodge of Masons, and was held in high esteem by all his comrades in the Fire Department and also by his host of friends. He is survived by his wife, three brothers and three sisters.

Mr. Fleming has been a resident of the Hilltop since 1886 and was known to be one of the most fearless firefighters the department had. He was a man that always adhered strictly to the rules of the department. Had great respect for his superiors and was always ready for action. His friends were legions as was manifested through the long illness and death. He was a great sufferer, but bore it with great fortitude. The following beautiful poem is very appropriate to his life.

He was thy friend and mine,
And today in the places where
He was wont to gather with us,
There is now a sense of some great loss.
The cheery smile, the warm firm clasp of hand—
Seal of sincerity—the kindly presence of a manly man,
Now are but memories.
And yet this hour he lives within the hearts
Of all who met and loved him well.
O gracious friend of friends,
Thy life is ours.
Even as thou may we hold charity's wide mantle
Over friend and foe alike:
As thou, give what is best within our hearts.
To those along life's way,
And at Eventide with fearless smile say cheerfully
Goodnight: close tired eyes
And waken in everlasting day.

Funeral services were held, Sunday at the home, Rev. P. E. White, former pastor of Glenwood church, conducted the service, assisted by Rev. Mr. Bowman.

The Humbolt Masonic Quartet sang. City firemen attended in a body. Burial in Wesley Chapel.

WOMEN IGNORE SHEIK

Go on Stage in Defiance of Order of Vicar of Sultan.

Turkish Women Find New Freedom as Result of Conditions Following the World War.

Constantinople.—The command of the Sheik-ul-Islam, vicar of the sultan, ordering Turkish women not to appear on the stage, is being ignored by them. The German-Austrian and allies' occupations of the city, with the loss of husbands, fathers and brothers, and the press of poverty, has brought a new freedom to Turkish women. This is daily seen by their clothing. They wear their veils still, instead of a hat, but turned back and tied in a pretty knot, after the manner of their Russian refugee sisters.

Because of the high price of cloth, Turkish women no longer wear a multitude of garments, designed in old time to hide the outlines of their figures. Both veil and dresses are a deep sea blue, instead of the dull conventional black once the custom. Some affect the homespun brown dress, the becoming garment designed by Halide Hanum, the nationalist woman leader.

These changes have dissipated the mystery which once enveloped the Turkish woman and Americans here find that she does not differ in looks very much from others. On an average, they are not so good-looking as the American women. The difference may be said to lie in their timidity. Even this quality is dissipated quickly when they come in contact with foreigners, as is the case in the mixed receptions given at the Constantinople college for girls, maintained here by Americans. At such receptions the Turkish girls and women talk brightly and cleverly with American naval officers and other guests, and sometimes take part in the dancing and flirtations.

GIRL AN ARTIST GENIUS

The constellation of child prodigies has received another star—this time a little girl with an unerring instinct for design.

She is ten-year-old Felice Maier of New York and she draws pictures the way other children play marbles. Not that she doesn't play marbles, too. Felice is a regular marble-playing, rope-jumping girl as well as a coming designer of note.

When Felice was four her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Maier, noticed the irresistible attraction a pencil had for her. She would never draw from models; she simply drew what her imagination prompted her to draw.

And she seemed to turn most naturally to pictures of women of fashion, dressed in the latest mode. Evening dresses, frocks, bathing suits, skating costumes and dreams of negligee were all represented by Felice before she was eight years old. Her sense of form, her breadth of imagination, her appreciation of the power of suggestion and relief are developed to a high degree.

OWNS CLOCK OF GEN. PUTNAM

Wooden Timepiece of Colonial Period Placed in Masonic Temple at Honeoye Falls, N. Y.

Rochester.—A relic of the olden times in the shape of a "Grandfather's Clock" has been placed in the hall in Masonic temple in Honeoye Falls.

The clock is owned by Dr. Harry R. Mariette, and because of its history it is worthy of more than passing notice.

This affidavit, sworn to before a notary public, vouches for its history:

"This clock was made in England and was brought to this country by a man named Davis and was afterward sold by him to Israel Putnam, and at his death was handed down to his eldest son, Israel Putnam, Jr. (the famous general of the Revolutionary war).

"At his death it became the property of James S. Putnam. After his death I came into possession of it and it was sold by me to Dr. Harry R. Mariatte in August, 1920."

The clock still keeps time.

Pressed Boy's Trousers While They Were on Him

Tony Volpona, twenty-two years old, a tailor of Covington, Ky., was fined $50 and costs by Judge Munson on a charge of assault and disorderly conduct preferred by the mother of Howard Barber, twelve years old. The testimony showed that the boy entered Volpona's place of business and asked to have his trousers pressed.

Volpona said he caught the boy and laid him across the ironing board and proceeded to use the iron, which was warmer than he thought, causing the boy to cry with pain. In passing sentence, Jude Munson said he felt sure there was nothing malicious in the conduct of the tailor but that he was careless. The case has been appealed.

Roland's Idea of a Perfect Woman

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Elsie was more or less accustomed to her brother Roland's impulsive actions, but his latest idea rather took her breath away.

"Sis," he had said in his cheery voice that morning at breakfast, "I have ordered the most exquisite set of gowns, evening, day and anything else in the way of time dress that you ever looked at. Also hats, shoes, slippers, stockings. In fact, I have bought almost anything that a lovely woman could possibly want. Now," as he saw his sister arriving at a state bordering on apoplexy from curiosity, he continued, "the idea is for you to find a girl who will fit them. She must be reasonably good looking, but that is not of great importance."

"Roland, have you quite lost your mind? Where do I find a girl, and what girl is going to wear a lot of clothes purchased by a young bachelor, and if she did, what are you going to do with her?"

Roland burst out laughing.

"My idea is not so absurd as it sounds," he informed her. "The fact is, I am a bit fed up with all the artificial, stupidly gowned women we know. I have bought what I consider some extremely artistic and distinguished clothes, and I want some one to wear them, and that some one must chum about with me at dinners, theaters, dances and all kinds of nice entertainments. Now don't get the idea that I am looking for a wife. I simply want a natural looking girl whose face is not entirely made up at the beauty parlors. I am sick to death of pulled eyebrows, crimson mouths and hair that looks like a waxed head. It is only a kind of lark, sis, but I want to experiment. You come in contact with so many girls down in the settlement who never get a chance to wear wonderful gowns—now—" he paused a moment, "can you find me one?"

"It Will Take a Girl of More Than a Little Poise to Wear These."

"I would like breathing space," laughed Elsie, "the idea is not so bad when one has details. I think no one but my prize brother could conceive it, however."

"You're a peach!" Roland grinned and treated Elsie to one of his not infrequent bursts of affection. "Use your own judgment—I rely on your taste and don't want to see any applicants. You must have her gowned and ready to go out with me some evening soon—when I return tired and droopy from business."

"You're so often droopy," laughed Elsie, now all excitement to see the fortunate girl who was to wear all the lovely clothes. She was responding readily to Roland's idea of a unique adventure. She was doubtful as to what her husband would think of it, but Elsie had a way of putting things in just the right way and at just the right moment.

The gowns, furs, evening cloaks and hats which arrived in relays were so exquisite as to make even the beautifully gowned Elsie gasp in admiration. The garments were one and all distinguished as to color, cut and individuality.

"It will take a girl of more than a little poise to wear these with elegance," thought Elsie, "she will almost have to be extremely well born and showy."

It was like a flash that inspiration came to Elsie.

The girl whom she had always wanted Roland to meet with a view to matrimony was just the right girl in the right place. With the cunning of the matchmaker, hitherto thwarted by a wary brother, she wrote the entire plot to Audrey Lancing and in return had a delightful answer.

"I jump at the chance," wrote Audrey. "Am just catty enough to want to meet Roland since he has shied away so often and the incognito will serve beautifully. I will arrive in my most demure, well-worn suit tomorrow and begin the first act."

Audrey was slim and dark. Her brow was broad and milk white and her black hair rolled back from it into a classic knot. Her eyes were dark and heavily lashed and her lips were scarlet. Otherwise Audrey was colorless in repose. The animated Audrey was suggestive of an animated Greek statue come suddenly to life.

Roland was guilty of a swift intake of breath when, upon entering the library that evening, Elsie introduced her selection to him. The fictitious name of Miss Granger had been assumed.

He quickly regained composure and sent a glance of complete approval to Elsie.

"This is very kind of you, Miss Granger," he said, and I hope you will find a lot of fun in this adventure. I expect to; so where will we go tonight?"

"Why not the opera?" suggested Elsie. "I'm sure Miss Granger loves music."

They whirled off to the opera.

Audrey was very silent, considering it the most likely way of ensnaring Roland's real interest. In many subtle ways, however, she kept him well aware of her presence. She was rewarded early in that first evening by realizing that her escort's attention did not waver from her.

There was no denying the fact that the girl Roland suddenly sprung on the public was a social find. Her clothes were always exquisite, her manner dignified and yet Roland had discovered that the heart within those beautiful garments was of equal fineness—a combination he had not hitherto found.

A scant few weeks of gayety had passed before Roland entered his sister's boudoir with a look of defeat.

"I have failed," he said wrathfully. "I have failed to keep from loving this girl. What do you think about it, sis? Where did she come from and what can you tell me about her? She has been so reticent that I am fearful she has a husband tucked away or—"

"Rolly, dear," said Elsie soothingly, "why have you not told her you love her? She might give you all these details herself.

"Sis, you're a peach. I never thought of it," he flung back as he dashed off to find the girl who had so successfully worn clothes.

And Elsie smiled. She already knew where Audrey's heart was, and it was just exactly where every one wanted it to be.

Woman's Fourth Husband Cured Her of Matrimony

"I'm through," sighed Mrs. Elizabeth Miller as she left Judge Baldwin's courtroom in Chicago, where she had just been freed from her husband, William Miller, whom she charged with stealing her diamonds and with having 12 other wives.

"I'm through," she repeated. "I've been married four times and have learned my lesson. My last husband opened my eyes."

PILOT HOLDS RECORD

Has Traveled More Than 3,000,000 Miles on Ohio River.

Captain Williamson, Sixty-Two Years in Service, Never Sick and Never Had Accident.

Cincinnati.—Capt. Edward S. Williamson, who recently celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday anniversary, believes he holds a river record that is unequaled. For 62 years he rode on boats on the Ohio river. For 55 years he was a licensed pilot. Now he is captain of the steamer John S. Hubbard, which operates between Cincinnati and Louisville.

The veteran river pilot, in relating the interesting story, said: "I was about fourteen years of age when I was first employed on a boat operated by my father from Pomeroy, O., where I was born. I navigated the Ohio river for seven years, and when twenty-one I obtained a license as a full-fledged pilot. I passed the examination without any trouble. All the men who were members of the board of examiners have since died.

"For 35 years I was pilot for the White Collar line, and made two trips a week between Pomeroy and Cincinnati, traveling on an average of 1,000 miles a week. At that rate, I traveled 52,000 miles a year, and in 35 years 1,820,000 miles. Mind you, in all that time I was never ill or lost a day.

"For five years I have been making two trips to Louisville each week. Each round trip is 300 miles, or 600 miles a week. That would make a total of 156,000 miles in five years. So you can see that 40 years of my service is unaccounted for, as to distance traveled. I think I have covered more than 1,000,000 miles in 22 years, making a total in excess of 3,000,000 miles in 62 years of service."

During the 62 years of service Captain Williamson never was in an accident, and the only time he was prevented from traveling was when the ice stopped the boats.

During the Civil war Captain Williamson piloted the gunboat Alice up the Ohio river, when Morgan's raiders were approaching the North. "I had to stand between pieces of boiler iron while in the pilot house to avoid being shot," he said.

HAWAIIAN RACE BEING REBORN

Infusion of Foreign Blood Reinvigorates Inhabitants of the Island.

KOREANS REFUSE TO MIX

Analysis of 14,559 Marriages in the Islands Reveals Some Surprises to Science—Japanese Not Most Prolific Race on Island.

Honolulu, T. H.—The Hawaiian race, which with the Polynesians in general, has been regarded as a dying people, is being reborn and reinvigorated by infusion of alien blood, according to statistics just compiled by Louis R. Sullivan of the New York Museum of Natural History now attached to the Bishop museum in Honolulu.

Mr. Sullivan has just completed analysis of 14,559 marriages in the islands, selected at random, and his findings in some cases have been surprises to science.

According to the tables, more American men in the territory marry women of blood foreign to their own than marry American or British women. The Japanese are not, as has been supposed, the most prolific race in the islands, but are surpassed in this regard by Portuguese, Porto Ricans, part-Hawaiians and Spanish. Of American women, more than one in every six living in the islands marry Hawaiians, part-Hawaiians and others of blood strange to their ancestry. Of all the racial groups the Korean women represent the only one which refuses to mix blood, not a single case of a Korean woman marrying a man other than a Korean having been discovered.

A New Racial Group.

As a whole, the tables indicate, the part-Hawaiian group has a tendency to consolidate, rather than scatter, since of Caucasian-Hawaiian males who marry, 82.7 per cent marry back into the full-blooded Hawaiian strain, while only 13.8 per cent take white wives, and the remainder, either inbreed among their own kind or marry at large. Of Asiatic-Hawaiian males, 43.6 per cent marry back into the Hawaiian strain, only 1.3 into the Asiatic strain and a negligible proportion into the Caucasian strain.

The result, so far as the Hawaiian race is concerned, is said to be a new racial group, fecund to a high degree, still abnormally susceptible to civilization's diseases, but with much higher resistant powers than the old Hawaiian stock and visibly adding to its numbers.

While the women of Korea lead all other males and females of the islands in marrying within their own race, there are other groups which are a close second in this respect. Only 0.3 of one per cent of Japanese women contract out-marriages, or unions with men of other races, while 0.7 of one per cent of Japanese men so pick their mates. The percentage for the Chinese is 6 per cent for the women and 41.5 per cent for the men; American, 17.9 for the women and 51.7 for the men; Portuguese, 32.3 women, 13.0 men; Hawaiian, 40.5 women, 19.5 men.

Pure Stock Dies Fast.

The pure-Hawaiian death rate is the highest in the islands, 13.48 per thousand annually, although the pure Hawaiian birth rate is nearly twice as high as American, British and other whites.

Scientists recognize that susceptibility to diseases of civilization is responsible for the disappearance of the pure Hawaiian race, but the figures just made public by Mr. Sullivan are the first to show that the intermarriage is rebuilding the old race into a stronger, more hardy people.

BRITISH TO PUSH COLONIZING

Plan Being Made to Settle Undeveloped Parts of Empire as Defense Measure.

London.—The government is to hold a conference with representatives of the dominions to formulate a policy of promoting the settlement of British colonists in new and undeveloped parts of the empire.

This plan is intended to serve the double purpose of distributing the population of the United Kingdom so as to populate the empty spaces of the empire and insure that the additional population of these undeveloped territories will be British both in birth and spirit.

By these means it is hoped to provide for the defense as well as the development of the empire and to reduce the surplus of women over men in the population of the United Kingdom.

Could Not Get Central.

Castle, N. Y.—A country school teacher entered a business place one day and asked to use the telephone. A pencil sharpener was fastened to the shelf on which the telephone stood. She cranked the sharpener and took down the receiver. Getting no reply, she repeated it several times. Turning to the clerk, she said: "That's the reason I have never had a telephone installed in my house. You can't get service."

"Just turn the crank on the bell box. That was a pencil sharpener you were using," suggested the clerk.

Social Stunts

On Saturday evening, May 14, Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Gillilan, 225 Midland avenue, went out for a little ride. On their return they found their house filled with former Athens county people who are now residents of this city and a few of their real near neighbors to the number of seventy-two. Dr. and Mrs. Gillilan were surprised and pleased almost beyond words.

A lovely leather traveling bag and a leather toilet case was presented to Dr. and Mrs. Gillilan in a very pleasing manner by Mrs. A. L. Ogg. She presented the gifts as mere tokens of the love and esteem of all present.

Dr. Gillilan has practised on the Hilltop for the past seven or eight years, and previous to this practised for a number of years in Amesville, Athens county. All who have known him and his family, either in a friendly or professional way, have learned to love and respect them very highly, and their loss will be very keenly felt when they move to their farm in the near future for a rest, a few miles from Circleville.

Refreshments were served and all departed at a very late hour after spending an evening long to be remembered by all present.

The Midland Avenue Bible Class entertained with a farewell party for Mrs. E. E. Gillilan Wednesday afternoon, May 18, at the home of Mrs. Welch, 393 Midland avenue.

Mrs. Gillilan will leave Columbus soon for her new home in Fairfield county. She has been teacher of the Midland Avenue Bible Class since its organization in 1913. She was presented with a silver sandwich tray by the class, the presentation speech was made by Mrs. M. M. Marshall, whose efforts were responsible for the class organization eight years ago. Greetings were read from the former secretary, Mrs. Hengst, and her mother, Mrs. Buckingham, of Lancaster. The following ladies were present: Mrs. Gillilan, Mrs. Marshall, Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Lyman, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Swaney, Mrs. Blackwell, Mrs. Clemmings, Mrs. Mary Nelson, Mrs. Himebrook, Mrs. Six, Mrs. Welch, Mrs. Sansbury, Mrs. Bennett, Mrs. Beekman, Mrs. Sebring, Mrs. Finly, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Schott.

Saturday evening, May 21, the salesmen and buyers of the Columbus Merchandise Company came to the home of Mr. Carl Wehrle, 138 South Burgess, and surprised him. He was presented with a Hamilton watch. Mr. Wehrle has been with this company eighteen years and has been a buyer for eight years. He left Tuesday to take up his new position with f. Robbins Company, Pittsburgh. He will move his family there as soon as he can secure a home. He has the best wishes of his friends.

The members of the Beta Lambda class of Glenwood Sunday School entertained their husbands in the basement of the church on Tuesday evening, May 24. The basement was beautifully decorated with American flags and pink and white peonies, these being the class colors. Several social stunts were engaged in, which were most thoroughly enjoyed by all, after which dainty refreshments were served by the class members. The pastor and his wife, the Reverend and Mrs. Bowman, were the guests of the evening.

A small fire in the garage of L. W. Byerly, 38 N. Ogden Ave., occasioned a call for the Hilltop Fire Department. Blaze extinguished with little difficulty and no damage.

The Hilltop Fire Department was called to Sullivant and Belvidere last Monday, where a pot of meat on the stove had reached the "burning point" while the lady of the house was absent for a short time. The smoke pouring out of the room caused the alarm.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR RAISING FUNDS TO LIQUIDATE THE MORTGAGE ON ST. PAUL'S UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH HAS BEEN EXTENDED THIRTY DAYS

Inclement weather and sickness among committee members has delayed the work of the Mortgage Fund Committee to such an extent that it has been found necessary to extend the time limit to June, instead of May 30.

This will give the "fire bugs" thirty days more in which to gather "fuel for the fire," which is to burn the church mortgage.

Two thousand sticks of kindling which will be sold at a dollar a stick have been prepared for this last four weeks of the drive. These together with the boards which have been sold at $5.00 each, will supply sufficient funds with which to clear the mortgage.

This will also give many more an opportunity to aid in the cause. "Add fuel to the fire."

NO WILD MEN THERE

Captain Hancock Found Only Shy Indians on Tiburon.

Civilization Just Where It Stood 100 Years Ago on Coast of Southern California.

San Diego, Cal.—The island of Tiburon, off the coast of Lower California, is not infested by cannibals of the Ceres tribe of Indians, but, on the contrary, is inhabited by Indians of a very shy nature, who dwell in small grass huts on the northern end of the island.

Capt. George Allan Hancock of Los Angeles, master of the yacht Velero, just returned from a 3,000-mile cruise down the coast of Lower California and up the gulf to Santa Rosalia, thus dissipates the belief that man-eating Indians wait on Tiburon for luckless adventurers or shipwrecked parties.

Speaking of his trip, Captain Hancock said:

"We cruised along the coast of Lower California to the charming little city of La Paz and then around and inside the gulf for 400 miles. We were all curious to stop at the much-talked-of island of Tiburon, on which cannibal Indians were believed to dwell. But although we went on the island armed to the teeth and looked for the warlike natives, not one showed up to greet or eat us. Though we saw traces of their habitation, crude little grass huts and other primitive evidence of their occupation of the country, we failed to make the acquaintance of any of the Tiburon people."

Captain Hancock described the pearl fishing at La Paz. Only primitive methods are used, he said, and the gems are sold to foreign dealers.

While at La Paz, the party was greeted by a party of Mexican officials who were there to confer with some Americans regarding the starting of an American colony at Magdalena Bay, the largest settlement within 900 miles south of San Diego.

The attitude of residents of sections visited by the party is to welcome American capital and American brains in the development of their country.

Years of revolution, said the captain, have left their mark on Guaymas.

$30 HORSE TIES UP TRAFFIC

Homesick Steed Blocks Trains When He Ambles Onto Railroad Bridge.

St. Louis.—"Henry, you-all shore was headed away f'm you own feed box." Wilbert Matthewes, a negro of Madison, Ill., said with a chuckle when he reclaimed his $30 steed, which had blockaded five passenger trains and six freight trains for more than an hour, when it ambled into the Merchants' bridge, a railroad span, en route to St. Louis.

It cost the owner of the bridge $75 to lay a board walk to get Henry off the bridge, but the incident caused amusement to more than 1,000 pedestrians and passengers.

Henry, whose home is at 810 Franklin avenue, Madison, wandered toward his old home here shortly after 5 p. m and an hour later was discovered by John Moore, 800 Farrar street, a track walker, perched on the west end of the bridge, drinking out of the fire water barrel.

QUITS PULPIT FOR MOVIES

Toronto Pastor Thinks He Can Do More Good as Actor Than as Preacher.

Toronto.—That he will not again assume charge of a congregation in Canada after his resignation has been accepted by the Bond Street Congregational church, and that he will enter the motion-picture business as an actor if he cannot get a pastorate in the United States, is the statement made by Rev. Dr. Millar.

He has had an offer from a motion picture firm in the United States, but has not yet accepted it.

Dr. Millar stated that he felt his character portrayals of Shakespeare were sermons, and that the Bible and Shakespeare were so inseparably connected as to characters that he could do more good in portraying life on the mimic stage or upon the screen.

Dr. Millar is a graduate of Chicago university.

A Case of Platonic Friendship

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Have you ever been in love?"

Virginia Fellows looked at the young man who occupied the other end of the divan. He was leaning back against the orange pillows and he did not look at her as he put the question.

She studied his straight nose and the turn of his cheek, his crisp light hair, the way his collar set and peculiar case of his tweed suit before she answered.

"Yes——"

He scrutinized her face sharply for a moment.

"Why I never thought you——"

"You didn't expect me to wear it like a placard," Virginia said scornfully. "Of course I've been in love. With a man—a real man."

Jimmy Masters was watching her with a new interest.

Her hair that was always so smoothly coiled, her blue eyes that were always so frankly clear, her fresh skin with just a trace of color, made Virginia attractive if not pretty.

But now her eyes were vivid and gleaming, and she pushed back her hair with a little excited gesture.

"What was he like?" Jimmy asked with nothing but curiosity in his voice

"Like? He was dark and tall and not handsome, perhaps, but unforgettable. He had a scar across one eyebrow, and when he smiled you never could forget him! He had a voice—oh!——"

"And what became of this wonder?" Jimmy asked with sarcastic intent.

"Laugh at me!" Virginia said fiercely, "It's just like you to laugh at me!"

"I'm not laughing," he said apologetically, "you ought to know that. We've been friends long enough——"

"I Forgot My Gloves."

"Oh yes—friends. Have you ever been in love?" she put the question with the same nonchalance that he had used.

Jimmy Masters shoved his hands into his pockets and stretched on his feet. He studied the toes of his cordovan leather with interest.

"Rather."

"What became of her?" Virginia asked in turn, and her voice was not quite so nonchalant.

"Didn't care anything for me. Never will. Don't suppose I ever will forget her."

"Oh!"

The clock on the mantel chimed 11 and Jimmy rose to his feet.

"Good-night. It's been a jolly evening. Suppose you'll take the 8.30 to the city?"

She nodded as she gave him her hand and smiled that frank genuine smile of comradeship that had attracted Jimmy some six months back.

Still smiling she stood there with quiet composure until the door had closed after him.

Then with a little sob she flung herself down among the pillows and lay there choking with her tears. She dug her hands into the orange cushions and her smooth hair that was always coiled so exactly fell over one cheek. She knew she was rumpling her dress, she knew she would be a wreck in the morning—but she didn't care.

Her eyelids would be swollen and she would have a headache, but now she gave way to the fury of her grief.

When she had cried until her head spun, she twisted her wet handkerchief into a little ball and tried to dry her cheeks with it.

"You're a poor old idiot!" she told herself, sitting up straight; "of course Jimmy Masters was never in love with you! That you could have thought he was for one instant"——she choked back a sob.

Then she laughed a funny choky little laugh at the queerness of life.

Here was she, Virginia Fellows, the secretary of Prof. Blackwell, the envied of all the other office workers. She had her holidays and her summer vacations, and was the memory of the erratic old man and noted for her efficiency.

Efficiency: A disgusting word! It meant that she was never late and that she could smile even when it hurt. It meant she could write perfectly typed letters and keep the files and wear blue serge dresses with fresh white cuffs and never have a hair out of place. It meant that her hands were cool and white and that she was never hurried.

"Efficiency! I hate the very sound of it," and Virginia flung herself back among the pillows.

That was the way Jimmie thought of her when he saw her coming back on the train—always cheerful and friendly and calm.

"I say, I'm awfully sorry——" Jimmy Masters stood there stammering. "I forgot my gloves. I didn't think you were here. I wouldn't have——"

Virginia's face was tear-stained and her hair was frankly mussed, her voice had a queer, uncertain sound that struck at his heart.

"Yes—just go——"

"Ginny, it isn't anything—that fellow—you're not thinking of him?"

"No! no! no!" she said in a stifled voice, and he saw her blouse was crushed and one cheek was scarlet where it showed beneath her fingers.

"I never knew you were like this. I always thought you were so superior; didn't have feelings like the rest of us fellows——"

Virginia gave a queer, uncertain laugh and looked up at him.

"I know you'll only laugh at me, but that girl I told you about. It's you. I never would have dared to tell you if I hadn't seen you like this—you couldn't like me, could you, Ginny?"

"But I do; that's the trouble," she said, "and that man——"

He caught her hand and heard her whispered words, "I just made him up; but I thought we were just—friends——"

After he kissed her he said wickedly, "Old Plato knew what he was doing when he made up that friendship gag!"

'GOLD' ALCHEMY HOAX OF BACON

For 600 Years His Writings Have Been Studied in Hope of Finding Secret.

ONLY NONSENSICAL JARGON

Science Might Have Been Much Farther Advanced Today If Roger Bacon Had Not Hidden His Knowledge in Cipher.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Alchemists who for 600 years sought to find in Roger Bacon's cipher writings the secret of turning base metals into gold were the victims of a hoax, declared William Romaine Newbold, professor of intellectual and moral philosophy at the University of Pennsylvania, before the general meeting of the American Philosophical society here.

Bacon, he contended, hid under a nonsensical jargon of alchemists' terms a marvelous storehouse of scientific knowledge.

Doctor Newbold told of his two years' labor to decipher the code Bacon used.

As a result of the revelations made by the 800,000 word manuscript, scientists have declared Bacon had remarkable knowledge of mathematical systems conceived today, and had not the discoveries made by him remained unknown to others until rediscovered hundreds of years after his death, science would have been just so much in advance of its present state.

Explanation of the Cipher.

"Bacon conceived the idea of expressing every letter of a word which he wanted to write in cipher by a syllable and building the syllable into a new word," he said. "For example, if the letter 'C' is represented by 'GR,' 'A' by 'AD,' and 'E' by 'ED' the word 'Graded' would spell 'Cat.'

"The principle cannot be used in this way because, first, every word will be represented in cipher by twice as many letters, and second, no words can be used in cipher except those of an even number of letters. To meet these difficulties Bacon lays down the rule that successive syllables must end and begin with the same letters, doubled letters being dropped. Thus 'Cat' may be spelled in the Bacon cipher as follows: 'Ca-at-td'; dropping the double letters, one gets the word 'Gold.'

No Wonder Secret Was Kept.

"In reading the ci[illegible] you double every letter except the first and last and thus discover the syllables which spell the word. But it is seldom possible to find syllables which fulfill these conditions and yet spell a new word when arranged in the order of letters of the original wo[illegible] like 'cat,' for example, 'Cat' may also be spelled 'ar-rk-da,' and the syllables may be rearranged into the word 'dark,' but when 'dark' is translated the word 'cat' will reappear as 'tea,' the order of the letters being disarranged. These are the principles Bacon used.

There are 484 possible combinations of the letters of two 22-letter alphabets, taken two by two. Bacon makes every one of the 484 represent a letter of his alphabet and with them spells his words in Latin in the way indicated above. He disarranges the underlying text as little as possible and it usually is still recognizable, but frequently it is disarranged so much that scholars probably never will agree as to how it should be reconstructed."

101 Veda St., Hamilton, New South Wales, Australia, March 30, 1921.

Rev. G. R. Robbins, D. D., Columbus, Ohio.

My Dear Bro.: I never see your name in print that pleasant memories do not come to me. I see you in your very uncharacteristic position on the Atlantic when I took your picture. I know also you are a seer and a prophet with a vision. I heartily congratulate you upon your "Call to Prayer" in the "Baptist" of January 29. I have known such very wonderful things brought about by this very method. I write you to continue insisting upon God's own method for a great spiritual awakening. I have been on a campaign here for the past year. We have had great blessing. Souls saved at every place. Two stand out conspicuously, North Sydney and Newcastle. In the former the men met Saturday night and prayed continually until 11 a. m. the next day, continuing "all night in prayer." A marvelous blessing came in the following day. Seven were very happily saved. We believe the next Saturday night it was repeated and another blessing was showered upon us. The blessing has continued eight months and hardly a Sunday without visible results. "Prayer changes things." If the people will follow your instructions recalled from the Word. In Newcastle the same result followed and the same method was pursued. Six husbands and their wives came out boldly among the 27 who made profession. I find it so everywhere I have gone in the 25 years experience I have had as an evangelist. Continue to pray for our mission here. In a few weeks we go on via India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, France, England and back to begin our first campaign at home in Washington, D. C.

The same spirit of indifference is here as in the United States. The same news comes from England. The Church of Christ must get down on their knees and fulfil the conditions of God's promise and He will fulfil the promise. God bless you more and more abundantly. Pray for our work

I remain, dear brother.

Yours in Him,
Geo. Robert Cairns.

"The House of Fear," is the announced subject of the lecture by Judge Marcus A. Kavanagh of the Superior Court of Chicago when he appears on the Hilltop Redpath Chautauqua during the week of July 16 to 22. Judge Kavanagh is a recent and valuable addition to the strong program previously outlined for the local assembly.

The Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "H. M. S. Pinafore," slated for Chautauqua's fifth day, is to be offered with special scenic and lighting effects. A cast of twenty-two people is being coached by William J. Keighley of the production department of the Redpath Company in the East.

"Nothing But the Truth," the comedy in which William Collier scored so successfully, is Chautauqua's third day offering, in three acts, by a company of nine players. The Redpath management says it will be greater than "It Pays to Advertise."

The management this year will present the Euterpean Artists, a company of six talented girl musicians, and Edwin M. Whitney, monologue specialist supreme. This is to be Mr Whitney's third tour of the Redpath circuit. Previously he gave "The Fortune Hunter" and "Turn to the Right."

Laurant and Company, magicians; the New York Brass Choir, the Fisher Operatic Company, Edward Amherst Ott, Dr. Stephen A. Lloyd, Marie Rose Lauler, of France, and the Procter-Stolofsky Concert Company are among the other headliners of Chautauqua week. There is no increase in price of season tickets. Get your order in early, as a rush for tickets is anticipated.

Death of Miss Moorman

The news of the drowning of Miss Eleanor Moorman on Decoration Day, which so suddenly came late that day, spread a cloud of deep sorrow over the entire Hilltop.

Miss Moorman, in company with Mr. E. L. Murter and his three sons, of 39 Whitethorne Ave., had gone early in the day on a picnic, out near Groveport Park, and while bathing in Big Walnut Creek she was drowned in a sink hole. She was a good swimmer and it is supposed was strangled after being in the water only a short time.

She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Moorman, 2105½ West Broad street. She was 14 years old and a student at West High School.

Her body was recovered by E. L. Murter, Jr. Efforts to resuscitate with a lung motor failed.

Besides her parents, she leaves a sister, 6 years old. Mr. Moorman is proprietor of the Hilltop Confectionery, at Broad St. and Whitethorne Avenue.

Funeral services Thursday at two o'clock.

Mrs. Kennedy, Superintendent of "Mothers' Jewels" of the Glenwood H. M. S., together with her assistants, Mesdames Bishop, Allen and Elliott, are planning for the "Jewels'" annual party to be held in the church basement on Saturday, June 4th, at 2 p. m. They will also have their mite box opening at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Smith, 143 N. Warren Ave., have returned from a visit with relatives and friends in Dublin, Ind. They were accompanied home by Mrs. Temple, Richmond, Ind. While out of the city Mr. Smith attended a convention of O. R. T. railroad workers at Savannah, Ga.

Suits, dresses and coats awfully cheap at Seiller's big sale.

Miss Robbins and Miss Greiser of the Robbins-Greiser School of Music, Midland Ave., are building up a strong school. The enrollment now is almost a hundred, and next fall they are contemplating adding another piano teacher and violin teacher, both from the Cincinnati College and Conservatory of Music. The Elocution Department under Miss Robbins is to have their own dramatic club, as is also the violin department to have an orchestra.

Miss Greiser, who not only is an artist piano teacher is also a pipe organist of unusual ability. She is now organist of the First Baptist Church on East Broad St.

The Luther League of St. John's Lutheran Church invite the public to hear the entertainers from Grove City in St. John's Chapel (Burgess Ave.) on Thursday evening, June 9th, at 8 o'clock.

Ruth Louise Cowley is the name of a new member on the Cradle Roll of Hill Crest Baptist Sunday School. She is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Cowley, 47 N. Park Ave., and weighed 8 pounds on the day of her birth, Saturday night, May 28th.

(You will note that Rev. Mr. Cowley will preach on "The Little Things of Life" next Sunday morning. It will probably pay to hear him.—Publisher.)

Mr. J. W. Dinsmore has begun the foundation for a business block adjoining the Hilltop Bank at corner of South Park and Broad Sts. It will be two stories high, having two store rooms on the ground floor and office rooms and hall on the second floor. It will be like the bank building in appearance.

Don't fail to attend the first lawn fete of the season, at West Broad School, this Friday evening.

The Store of Instant Service

OLD SOL. AND # GIBSON REFRIGERATORS

FOR THESE HOT DAYS THAT ARE HERE, AND THE ONES THAT ARE COMING, point the fact that you must have a refrigerator. Why not buy a good, dependable one; one that will last you many, many years longer than yon could ever expect of one.

IT'S IN THE CONSTRUCTION

All Gibson Refrigerators are built with double walls, perfectly insulated. A positive dead air space is formed in all the walls, with especially prepared non-conducting felt or charcoal sheathing on either side of it, so that it is impossible for the outer air to penetrate the box. The corners are also solid, making the Refrigerator much stronger than others. The inner case is made of tasteless and odorless lumber, and there is no wood exposed in any part of the inside of the box.

A Scene Not in the Picture

By KATE EDMONDS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"No," said the landlady stonily, "I'm sure I don't know where Miss Ford went to—some one said she had given up her position and gone out West to act in the movies, but I'm always busy and can't keep track of folks after they leave my house. Are you the young soldier she was engaged to?"

Dick Reynolds nodded.

"Yes—you look like the picture she had on her bureau. She read that you had been killed in action and so she just got pale and sick and went away. Sorry."

"Thank you," said Dick as he turned away. He wrote a letter to Marcia, addressed it in care of her old employers, marked it to be forwarded and waited. At last after months of fruitless waiting and searching he found a position in Chicago. Night after night he went to the movies, hoping for some clew, and then there came a time when he saw a well-acted screen-drama—and his own Marcia being kidnaped by a dark villain in a black evening cloak.

"Ain't it awful!" shivered a girl sitting next to Dick.

Her companion giggled. "It looks real, but 'tain't."

Dick found it difficult to believe that the characters were not real with Marcia's face so clear, so agonized. He saw the villain carry her away in a black motor car to a greasy looking tenement, where several well dressed people seemed to threaten her life. One man caught her slender wrist and pulled her toward the door.

"Hi!" yelled Dick, and everybody laughed. He looked fiercely around and sank back in his seat, grim and alert. He watched the picture until the doors closed and the next day he saw it again. By this time he was sure that his own sweetheart was acting in the movies. Then he saw the manager of the theater.

With the name of the producers he found the location of the company—Hollywood, California,—and packing his grip he set out in the search for Marcia. By this time he knew the picture by heart, learned that the name of the actress was Elizabeth Jayne, but strong in his own belief he declared the girl to be none other than Marcia.

At Hollywood the studios were all so busy that he barely escaped becoming famous because he had refused so many chances to act as a substitute or an extra in one of the many companies. Once he had an adventure that he never forgot.

"Say, young feller," yelled a hot-looking man, as Dick approached a studio. "Want a job?"

"Looking for a girl," returned Dick. "Plenty of girls here—can you ride?"

"Yes."

"Stunts?"

"Cavalry."

"Good. Come in. Man gone sick—scene waiting; you got to shoot a man and carry off a girl."

Dick grinned and followed the excited director. He was led into a dressing room, given a cowpuncher's outfit of clothes and came rolling out with a swagger that made the director stare.

"Say, you've been a puncher?"

"Yes."

"Steady job, maybe—now you hop into my car. The rest of the bunch waiting out on location ten miles away—just sent in word that Ames has broken his leg; listen now." He drove the car recklessly while he poured into Dick's ear the instructions he was to follow. "When you're called you ride up to the door of the cabin shoot Arnold—he's the leading man—and grab the girl up and ride off with her."

"Anywhere—out of the picture—until you're called again, and then you——" and so on—until Dick felt qualified to do his part perfectly; yet when he saw the expectant company his wits almost deserted him. He watched the progress of the play with feverish interest because there was a girl——

She had appeared at intervals in the play, and while there was a vague familiarity about her face and even her graceful walk, he could not make up his mind whether it was his Marcia or not. Her face was made up a little, as was his own, and both were part of a grotesque looking company. Some one told him her name—Elizabeth Jayne—and because he was afraid to have his dream shattered, he did not pursue the subject further. Then it dawned upon him that this was the girl he was to rescue—surely, he would know then!

He played his part extremely well and found a strange fascination in the work; the girl looked at him once or twice with a faint show of interest, but the grease paint disguised him well. Then came the moment when Dick, the bad man, was to kidnap the hero's sweetheart. Dick mounted his horse, dashed up to the cabin door, shot the hero with a blank cartridge and swooping down, gathered the girl's slight form in his arms and dashed away to the big tree, where he had been told to await the blare of the director's megaphone. "That was fine," said the girl, cordially, as they stopped under the tree. "Set me down, please."

"Finding's keeps," grinned Dick, looking her straight in the eyes. "Oh!" she cried, then "Dick!" and she was hugging him tightly.

"Hi!" the megaphone blared at them angrily. "Quit that—it's not in the picture!"

"It's in our picture," grinned Dick as he rode up to the director. "I just found my girl after five years, and—"

"Excused!" bellowed the director: "stay out for awhile and come back when you get over it—meanwhile we'll do something else. Shoot!"

The stamp clerk at the Grand Central post office says he has seen many funny things during his 15 years at the window.

A foreign-looking man stepped up to the stamp window the other day and handed the clerk a letter with a 2-cent stamp on it. It was overweight, so the clerk handed it back and said, "Two cents more."

"No understan'," said the man.

"Two cents," repeated the clerk. "One, two! Two cents!" And he held up two fingers. After repeating this several times, the customer seemed to understand and produced 2 cents, for which he was given another 2-cent stamp. Thereupon he handed the letter back to the clerk and turned to go away.

"Here!" called the clerk, "put the stamp on here. It needs 2 cents more."

"I geeva you two da cent!" exclaimed the man.

"Yes, but put the stamp on here." And the clerk pointed to the corner of the letter.

The man's face brightened with understanding. "Oh!" he said, and licking the stamp he very carefully stuck it on top of the other one.—New York Sun.

DETECTIVES

That scriptural passage, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Is illustrated by the following story. Mr. Jacob B., tells the story of his boyhood. His mother gave him a basket of pop-corn to plant; after planting a number of rows under a broiling sun, he could not see that the grains had sensibly lessened in number and the task seemed to be endless. He dug a hole, dumped the remainder into it, and told his mother that he had planted all the corn.

She doubted and said, "Jake, if you have told me a lie that corn will tell on you." The weather was seasonable and sun and showers soon brought up the corn. Then his mother marched him into the field and showed him the thick stocks that had shot up from the wholesale planting. The truthful grains had told on him.

ORE DRESSING SPECIAL STUDY

Big Mine Companies Encourage Scientific Research Work in Ore Concentration.

DEPLETION OF IRON ORES

There Is an Annual Demand for 75,000,000 Tons of Low-Grade Variety—Direct Result of Lessons Taught by War.

New York.—America's fast thinning deposits are yielding more and more grudgingly the 75,000,000 tons of iron ore annually consumed in this country, according to authorities at Columbia university, where the upbuilding of ore-dressing laboratories is being fostered by big outside enterprises.

Profit from a bountiful supply of high-grade ores was easy in the old days, it was said, but now to reap even a small margin of gain enormous tonnages of low grade ores, requiring highly specialized scientific knowledge and skill, must be treated.

The application of scientific knowledge gained in college laboratories is facilitated by the co-operation of the universities and the industries. Arthur F. Taggart, professor of ore-dressing in the Columbia schools of mines, engineering and chemistry, said in connection with an announcement by the trustees of a gift of $2,500 for the purchase and installation of new equipment for the university's ore-dressing laboratories.

"This gift, by the Miami Copper company for the promotion of research in the problems of ore concentration, is further evidence of the generous attitude on the part of many company officials toward the engineering schools," Professor Taggart said.

Another Lesson From the War.

"It is a direct result of the lesson taught by the war that much of the knowledge gained in pure research in the college laboratory can be rapidly and profitably applied to commercial technical operations by proper co-operation between the technical staffs of commercial organizations and the investigators in the universities.

"The importance of thorough and specialized training in ore-dressing has been recognized coincidentally with the rapidly increasing demand for scientific and technical knowledge imposed on concentrating mill operators by the constant diminution in grade of metallic ores available for exploitation. In the old days of high-grade ore deposits no special knowledge was necessary to make a profit out of the treatment of the ores mined.

"According to W. G. Swart, mining and metallurgical engineer of Duluth, in an article written for Engineering Foundation, which is fostering industrial research on a nationwide scale, 'each year there are consumed in the United States about 75,000,000 tons of iron ore. Known deposits meeting this requirement are being rapidly depleted. The economic utilization of low-grade ores is the solution of this problem.'"

"To treat the present-day, low-grade ores at a profit requires the handling of enormous tonnages on a very small margin of possible gain," Professor Taggart continued. "The successful initiation and direction of such projects call for the highest scientific knowledge and engineering skill. Since no two problems of ore treatment are alike, training in the subject properly takes the line of a thorough grounding in fundamental principles, with each lesson pointed, where possible, by an experiment with a typical piece of mill apparatus. Such training for the general student in mining and metallurgy fits him for attack on the usual concentrating problems that will arise in his engineering experience.

Intensive Training.

"The man who plans to be a specialist in ore treatment needs more intensive training. This may be obtained either in the field or in school, but such a man will save time if he does part of his preparation in a school where the experience of an instructor is available for direction of his efforts and help in his difficulties. For such a student intensive research into some difficult and, preferably, slightly explored field is the best of all training.

"His calls in later work will mostly come only because others have failed in the solution of the particular problem, which usually means that it is new and difficult. Hence, his training must teach methods of attack and aid the development of the student's imagination, initiative and analytical ability. Research as outlined will do this, or it will make evident the lack of such qualities, without which successful specialization is impossible, and thus save much labor and disappointment.

"Co-operation between the universities and the industries of the country has been the subject of much thought within the last few years and many plans have been put forward to make such co-operation effective and profitable to both parties."

WOMAN WINS AS "DRUMMER"

Widow of Fifty and No Previous Business Experience Makes Good as "Salesman."

Omaha, Neb.—Mrs. R. R. McKenzie, a frail little woman over fifty years of age, with no previous business experience, but faced with the necessity of working for a living, has made good as a traveling "salesman" for an Omaha manufacturing concern, and her example has filled the entire selling force with "pep."

They have named it the "McKenzie spirit." While other salesmen were talking "hard times" and explaining why their order books were not as full as in previous years, Mrs. McKenzie got out and worked ten hours a day, radiating optimism and enthusiasm wherever she went, and came in with the biggest bunch of orders her firm had ever secured.

Divorce Asked by Pair Who Clashed on Meals

Mansfield, O.—Henry Lobell and his wife, Clara Lobell, have proved that a marriage between a man with a practical mind and a woman with a soul full of poetry is not an ideal match. "Senseless jingles," Lobell called his wife's poems. He said he had to pay for having a volume of his wife's poems printed. "I got tired coming home to a can of sardines. I like a cooked meal. I had to cook 90 per cent of my meals." They are seeking a divorce.

AMERICA'S ENTRY INTO WAR

First Gun in Late Great Conflict Said to Have Been Fired From Steamer Mongolia.

Captain Rice of the American steamship Mongolia of the Atlantic Transport line, which arrived at Liverpool on April 25, 1917, reported that the first gun of the war was fired from his vessel off the coast of Ireland, on April 19. The gun was trained on the periscope of a submarine which was sighted dead ahead on the last afternoon of the voyage.

The captain gave the order for full speed ahead with the intention of ramming the submarine which, however, disappeared, but a few minutes later appeared on the vessel's broadside. The gunners fired at 1,000 yards and immediately the submarine disappeared and oil was seen on the water when it submerged. Later it was reported that the periscope was smashed and the commander was killed, but that the submarine was not sunk. Whether or not this is the case is not known.

Lost—A Private Secretary

By FREDERICK HART

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Mr. Collins!" The name was a command—a roar from the inner office, where Hezekiah Hawkins, senior partner of the firm of Hawkins & Doolittle, engineers, held solitary sway.

"Yes, sir—right here!" The young man who spoke these words was pleasing to look upon. He was tall and slender, with light hair and a mouth that seemed forever to be about to twist itself into a grin. But there was no grin on his face as he hurried toward the sanctum of his chief. "Old Man Hawkins," as the outer office called him, was in one of his tantrums, and woe betide the employee who would keep him waiting! Collins, the private secretary, betook himself to the office with all haste.

Hawkins glared at him as he entered, but could find no immediate reason to rage, so he merely rasped out, "Sit down!" and jerked a letter from a pile that lay before him.

"These fresh railroad people are raising the dickens with us on rates, Collins," he growled. "This is the second letter I've had from them. Now we want the bridge job and we're going to get it—but it'll be on our own terms, and not on—ouch! Holy ginger!"

"What's the matter, Mr. Hawkins?" Collins was jolted out of his usual attitude of patient listening. Mr. Hawkins pounded on the desk and raved aloud.

"Gout's the matter! Don't stand there grinning like an idiot! Do something!"

But Edward Collins could think of nothing to do, and as a result he became the recipient of a storm of rage that made all the other storms he had weathered pale into insignificance. At last Hawkins, breathless, ordered him out of the room, called for his car, and went home.

The next day Collins received a memo from his employer that caused him to pull a very long face. The stenographer asked him what was the trouble.

"My Foot's the Matter! It Hurts! It Hurts!"

"Trouble! Plenty of it! The old man's laid up with that gout of his and I've got to go out to his country place and help him with his work. Holy smoke! That's a pleasant prospect!"

The stenographer sympathized with him. "You'll have your head bitten off about thirty times a day," she said. "I don't see why you stay with him—why any of us stay with him, for that matter."

Collins let his grin spread. "We stay because he's the best and squarest boss in New York, and we know it. Let him howl and tear and cuss us out all he wants to—we know we'll get a square deal."

"You're right," agreed the stenographer, nodding a blonde head. "But just the same, I don't envy you!"

Edward Collins arrived at the Pines, his employer's country place, that same evening in time for dinner. He dressed—they specified dinner coats at table—and reflected that it might be worse. He had a nice room and was not treated as a servant. As he descended the stairs he looked for Mr. Hawkins, but did not see him. Instead there swam into the field of his vision the loveliest thing he had ever laid eyes on—a girl about his own age, in a shimmering evening gown that made her look like a fairy in a misty cloud. He could only stare as she came toward him.

"I'm Miss Hawkins—Evangeline Hawkins," she explained amused at his look of surprise. "Dad won't be down to dinner—and he won't want you till tomorrow morning. Poor dad!" she added. "His foot hurts him so, and I'm afraid he'll make it awfully uncomfortable for you."

Collins grinned. (Did I say that he had a most attractive grin?) "Oh, I'm rather used to it, Miss Hawkins. And I'm genuinely sorry he's ill. You see things at the office——" and he launched into a detailed account that took him half through dinner. Suddenly he remembered. "I'm afraid I've bored you awfully!" he exclaimed contritely.

"No, indeed—I'm awfully interested! Do tell me some more." And Collins did.

Three weeks later the situation was unchanged. That is, it was unchanged as far as Mr. Hawkins' gout was concerned, but there was a decided change in the affairs of Edward Collins.

Formerly he had spent his evenings reading or wandering over the grounds alone; but now he seemed to haunt certain spots. It was a peculiar fact that Miss Evangeline Hawkins was nearly always near those spots. He was also given to mooning about, and Mr. Hawkins found some cause for complaint in inattention. It might have been noticed, in addition, that he cherished a withered rose in a drawer of his dresser. This rose had been worn by Miss Evangeline Hawkins at a small dance given at the house one week-end. She had dropped it and he had picked it up. All these signs, of course, mean nothing in particular.

And then one day he lost his notebook and Miss Evangeline Hawkins found it.

An hour after he had discovered his loss he came upon her in a little summer house in the garden. She was reading something—his notebook! With a sign of relief he approached. She rose, and smiled at him—a little uncertainly. "Here's your book," she said.

"Thank you!" He was relieved that she had found it.

"What neat shorthand you make!" she said.

He blushed crimson. "I—I've had a good deal of practice."

"Did you know," she said idly, "I went to a school once and learned stenography? I thought I'd be useful. I can still read it."

The red in his face deepened.

"Let me read some of yours—I've been looking it over and I can read it very well." She was turning the pages as she spoke. He became conscious of a wild desire to grab the book from her hands and flee; but he remained rooted to the spot.

"Here," she said. " 'Dear Sir—Your letter of the 15th received—I love her. In reply would say that—she is the sweetest girl in the world. We are unable to make any other terms than those stated in our last communication—Of course, I have no chance, but maybe——' "

He found his voice. "Please, Miss Hawkins, don't torment me. I shouldn't have done it, I know—I haven't any right—but I couldn't help it—won't you give me the book——"

She handed him the book, and he left her without a word.

That night as he prepared for bed he glanced once more over the pages where, in neat curves and angles, were the damning words that had made him hopeless for all time. He stared at them dully as he read sentence after sentence. Hawkins's terse business English interspersed with the thought of his own—as he thought—secret heart. And then his heart gave a bound and began beating madly; for at the bottom of a page, in characters quite unlike his own, a new line had been scrawled. He translated it breathlessly.

"Why say you have no chance? You never asked me!"

"So you've been making love to my daughter behind my back, eh?" Old Man Hawkins glared at his blushing secretary.

"Well, sir—she—didn't seem to mind."

"Oh, she didn't! Well, how do you know I won't?"

The halted Collins could only gulp and stammer. But into the room burst Miss Evangeline Hawkins, all radiant and happy and overwhelming.

"Daddy, you're not to pretend that you're angry when you're not. You know you told me——"

"Hush up!" roared Old Man Hawkins. But the mischief was done. Collins turned on him. "Do you mean to tell me that you've been scaring me to death all this time for nothing? I'll never be afraid of you again!"

"There it is! Run along, children, run along. You've found me out, and I've lost the best private secretary I ever had, but—I seem to have gained an excellent son-in-law."

Social Stunts

Last Sunday afternoon and evening Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Johnson entertained at their home, 52 Hawks Ave., in honor of Mr. William Ardle's 73rd birthday, and also it was the third wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Harold and Mr. and Mrs. James Ardle. ### CHAUTAUQUA MEETING.

If the meeting of the Hilltop Chautauqua association which was held at Carlile and Kerr's store Wednesday evening, June 1, is any indication of the success of the chautauqua this year, that event will be a "howling success." The enthusiasm was running high as evidenced by the attendance and actions taken to promote this event which means more to the growth of community interest than any other event of the year. To those residents of the Hilltop who are barred from visits or vacations in distant parts, the Chautauqua comes as a most wholesome treat. The story is told of when Mahomet could not go to the mountain, the mountain was brought to Mahomet. So it is with you, Mr. Hilltopper, a veritable week of recreation, education and fun is being brought to you July 16 to 22. The same old prices prevail, namely, adults $2.75; children, $1.38, for the season tickets while they last. It is anticipated that an early demand will be made for these tickets, so for the accommodation of the people who wish to get in their orders early the following persons have been named to handle such orders and furnish the tickets: W. L. Roller, secretary; M. Seiller, H. G. Butler, Fred Postle, Bert Elliot and C. J. Kohn. The same beautiful and picturesque site will be used that served so well last year, only this year the ground will be especially well lighted. On Wednesday afternoon, July 20, a "Big Surprise" will be "sprung." This feature is in safe hands so be sure to be on hand or you will miss something worth while.

All church organizations wishing to have refreshment stands are given free access to grounds, subject to direction of Chautauqua manager.

Season tickets will be available in a few days, so place your orders early.

What came near being a serious accident with a close call for life, happened at Broad and Oakley Monday morning. As Mr. C. A. Henderson in his auto was approaching Broad street on S. Oakley a young fellow driving a Ford came speeding eastward on Broad. Mr. Henderson stopped his machine but the other driver could not, but suddenly turned to the left, hitting and bending Mr. Henderson's fender. Then he shot across to the east side of Broad over the curbing, hitting an iron post in front of the Hilltop undertaking company, bending it over against a telephone pole, where he stopped, damaging his machine somewhat. Mr. George W. Peters was crossing Broad street just at this time, and only by a quick movement of himself was he saved from being struck and probably killed or badly injured.

All colors in Organdies. Seillers.

On last Sunday afternoon a service in connection with the breaking of ground for the proposed new church of St. John's Lutheran congregation, was held on the site of the prospective church, Broad street near Hague Ave. Rev. Schiff and the pastor of St. John's, Rev. G. W. Lose, made short addresses, and Rev. E. Poppen of Grove City, O., offered prayer. The large attendance gave evidence of the interest many are taking in the growth of St. John's.

Mrs. Elmer Reynolds and daughter, Margaret, of Circleville, Ohio, formerly of Columbus, left Sunday to join her husband in Los Angeles, Cal., where they will make their future home. Mrs. Delno Young, Mr. and Mrs. John Stout, Mrs. Margaret Shabley and son Robert, of Circleville, and Mr. Brannon Browning, of Akron, Ohio, accompanied them to Columbus and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Lylle, 382 S. Warren Avenue.

Plausibility.

Colonel George Harvey said at a dinner in New York, apropos of high retail prices:

"A guest in a Florida hotel complained to the manager:

"'Your restaurant is conducted in a very rotten way. At lunch today I found a hair in the ice cream, a hair in the honey, and a hair in the apple sauce.'

"'Well, you see,' the manager explained, 'the hair in the ice cream came from the shaving of the ice. The hair in the honey came from the comb. But I can't for the life of me understand about the hair in the apple sauce, for I bought those apples myself, and they were all Baldwins.'"

Summer net corsets, $1.50. Seillers.

Hilltop Deaths

It is with deep regret and sorrow that we chronicle the death of another Hilltop business man and much beloved citizen, Mr. Clinton D. Williamson, who was suddenly stricken with acute indigestion last Sunday, June 5, and died before medical relief could reach him.

Mr. Williamson was 63 years of age, and has been in the barber business, a member of the firm of Budd and Williamson, 2250 W. Broad St., for 16 years, where the number of his friends had been multiplied over and over until they reach into hundreds, by his kindness and agreeable disposition. He was a member of Hilltop Lodge No. 662, I. O. O. F., and of Glenwood M. E. church. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Edith Williamson. The funeral services were held at the residence, 2074 Fairmont Ave., Tuesday afternoon, and were very largely attended. Rev. P. E. White, former pastor of Glenwood church preached the funeral sermon. Also Mrs. Marshall gave a brief talk. Hilltop Lodge I. O. O. F. assisted in the services. Burial took place in Green Lawn cemetery, the Hilltop Undertaking Co. having charge.

Mrs. Rebecca Chambers Turner, 73, died of complications Monday at her home, 237 S. Ogden Ave. She had been ill for some time. Mrs. Turner was born near Columbus and had been a resident of Franklin county all her life. She leaves one son, Irwin Turner, and one daughter, Miss Mary Turner. Funeral at 2 p. m. Wednesday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn Cemetery by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Infant Hafey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hafey, died Sunday at the home of her parents, 168 S. Harris Ave. The body w[illegible] Ashville for burial by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mr. John Brown, age 20 years, died Tuesday morning at St. Francis Hospital, after two months' illness from diabetes. The funeral services will be Friday at the residence of his mother, Mrs. George Brown, 284 S. Hague Ave. Burial at New Holland, Ohio, by the Hilltop Undertaking Co. He leaves, besides his wife and baby, his mother, five brothers and four sisters.

George Allen Crawford died on June 1, 1921, at the age of 40, after having been a resident of the Hilltop about six months, yet in that short time his ready friendliness had won scores of friends for him. During his many hours of physical disability, he became a familiar figure on the street near his home, 34 N. Warren Ave., and no doubt there are many who did not even know his name who remember his friendly smile and cheerful greeting. His last weeks were filled with interesting and pleasant association with his kindly neighbors.

Enlisting in Co. M, Fourth Regiment, Ohio National Guard, in 1916, he was with his regiment through the border campaign, and remained with his company when it was mustered into the federal service in 1917.

Mr. Crawford was one of America's heroes of the Great War. A private in Company M, 166th Inf., Rainbow Division, he took an honorable and faithful part in every activity of that division overseas. Coming home apparently unhurt, he soon succumbed to the effects of German gas and the many hardships of army life, and as truly laid down his life for his country as if he had fallen on the battlefields of France.

George Crawford was the eldest child of Martin and Elnora Crawford, of Mt. Sterling, Ohio, and was a member of Sterling Post, American Legion. Besides his parents and his widow, formerly Margaret James, of Washington C. H., Ohio, he leaves a sister and three brothers in the Mt. Sterling community, and hosts of friends there, as well as in Columbus.

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy during the illness of wife and death of baby.

E. C. Hafey.

MANEUVERS BY U. S. AIR CRAFT

Director of Naval Aviation Lays Out Extensive Program for Summer and Fall.

BIG AIRSHIPS TO TAKE PART

Giant Dirigible Purchased From Great Britain Will Take Trip West as Far as Chicago—Maneuvers Also Planned for Pacific.

Washington.—With Atlantic and Pacific fleet air forces mobilized at bases on the two coasts, an intensive program of summer and fall maneuvers is being planned by Capt. William A. Moffatt, director of naval aviation.

Starting with the joint army and navy bombing tests off the Atlantic coast, designed to test the offensive value of aircraft against naval vessels, navy flyers will be put through several months of stiff exercises.

Early in July the naval airship ZR-2, purchased in Great Britain, will fly to this country in charge of an American crew. A great aerial demonstration will mark her arrival. Detachments of seaplanes, flying boats and dirigibles will fly far out to sea to meet the big airship and escort her to a point on the Atlantic coast just north of Boston.

Test Mooring Mast.

The ZR-2 will then skirt the coast southward, passing over the principal cities to Philadelphia, then proceed to the giant navy hangar at Lakehurst, N. J., and be "anchored" to a "mooring mast," the first device of this kind to be erected in this country.

Experts from Great Britain will superintend the erection of the mast which will be a steel structure about 150 feet high with a swiveled bridle at the top to which the nose of the dirigible will be moored, permitting the ship to swing always nose to the wind. The structure will cost about $50,000, and probably be fitted with an elevator to carry the crew of the dirigible to and from the ground.

After being thoroughly overhauled, the ZR-2 will undertake a cross-country cruise to show the ship to the people.

Will Pass Over Many Cities.

Present plans call for a trip to Chicago and return, at least by way of the southern border of the Great Lakes, and if cities west of Chicago provide mooring facilities the cruise may be extended indefinitely. The ship can make a round trip to Chicago without refueling.

Basing on Lakehurst, the ZR-2 is to operate along the coast later and participate in air fleet mobilization and extensive maneuvers and tactical drills.

On the Pacific coast similar maneuvers will be conducted in connection with the Pacific fleet. It is possible a squadron of naval aircraft may attempt a trip "around the rim" of the country from a point in Washington state to Maine, during the year, the longest airplane cruise ever attempted.

Plans for a flight from San Diego, Cal., to this city have been abandoned, as Capt. H. C. Mustin, commanding the Pacific fleet air force, who would have led the expedition, cannot be spared from summer exercises of the Pacific air forces.

Melbourne, Victoria. — American forms of spelling have been barred from official documents in the high court. He remarked that English spelling was good enough for him.

Dead Hero Made a Marshal.

Paris.—Gen. Gallieni, former minister of war and former military governor of Paris, who sent the army of Paris to the Marne in 1914 in taxicabs and who died in 1916, has been posthumously named a marshal of France in a decree signed by President Millerand. This was in accordance with authorization given by parliament recently.

SEEK NAVY STUDENTS

Marine Corps Is Authorized to Assist in Recuiting.

Stations Will Accept Enlistments for Midshipmen at the Annapolis Academy.

Washington.—Youngsters between the ages of eighteen and nineteen years, with ambitions to become midshipmen at the United States Naval academy, now will be accepted for enlistment at all marine corps recruiting stations.

One hundred enlisted men are appointed to the Naval academy each year, after a competitive examination given enlisted men of the navy and marine corps. They must not be more than twenty years of age on April 1 of the year it is desired to enter, and must have been in the service at least one year by August 15 of that year.

Adhering to its policy of rewarding meritorious members of its enlisted personnel with commissions, the marine corps will open an officers' training school in or near Washington this summer to fill over a hundred vacancies in the commissioned personnel of the corps.

During the war more than 800 enlisted men were commissioned in this country and France. The highest rank so far attained by an enlisted man who received his commission as a reward for meritorious service is that of a senior colonel.

The order recently issued by the major general commandant specifies that no noncommissioned officer will be considered for such advancement who shall have had less than one year's service in the army, navy or marine corps, of which not less than six months shall have been in the marine corps. Only men between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-seven years will be considered.

Motorist Hears Voice Under Car, Finds Deputy Sheriff Speechless With Rage.

Babylon, L. I.—"Ho, there! You've run over the sheriff!" called a voice from under the car of George Henrich as he switched it to the side of the street in Lindenhurst.

He looked out to see whence came the voice, and discovered a pair of legs extending from beneath his car.

"Blast your soul! Don't run over me again!" said the voice that evidently belonged to the legs.

He descended from his car and assisted the person from entanglement in the wheels, and found himself face to face with Deputy Sheriff Chas. Wild, irate to speechlessness, one ear clipped, his pants torn, one eye slightly mashed in and holding one wrist in the other hand.

Wild proceeded to arrest Henrich ... The case was taken into ... Wood's court. Henrich pl... to a charge of intoxi... by cheap ... less driving and was ...

"A guest in a Florida hotel complained to the manager:

"'Well, you see,' the manager explained, 'the hair in the ice cream came from the shaving of the ice. The hair in the honey came from the comb. But I can't for the life of me understand about the hair in the apple sauce, for I bought those apples myself, and they were all Baldwins.'"

Tom Holbrook's "Bride"

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nancy, stooping over the purple asters, did not hear the steps of the small boy along the grassy path.

"How plentiful the asters were this year," she thought, "and how nice that the house would look so pretty just when Tom was coming home." She wondered if he would think she was grown up at last with her hair tucked and in that new evening dress—black—to make her look older.

"Telegram, Miss Nancy, sign here," said the freckled urchin who had lately taken the responsibility of being a "messenger."

Nancy scrawled her name. Then she looked at the oblong of yellow with surprise. Who on earth? She tore it open. The words danced before her eyes for a moment in the sunlight.

"Florence and I arrive tonight on the 6:10.

"Tom Holbrook."

She read it over again trying to understand. Florence—what could it mean? The knowledge swept over her in a white, blinding flash. Tom was bringing home his wife!

Her knees felt like water, but she moved away, away from the sunlight that glared down at her, always from the old garden with its tangle of fallen leaves and autumn flowers.

Like a wounded animal she crept into the house, and she was glad that she was alone, that Aunt Myra had gone to the village and Luey was too busy in the kitchen baking to notice.

She went through the dining room and looked at the silver that she had polished this morning—for Tom. How lovely everything looked—the waxed mahogany, the pewter on the old cupboard that had the sheen of silver, the sun streaming in through the bay window and falling on the shelf that held all the gay blossoming things!

How they had worked, so that when Tom came home everything should please him, from the new puppy whose tail would grow too long, to the cinnamon rolls that he liked so much!

And Tom was coming with his bride—he had never told them, never let them know that there was a girl in the city. He had always pretended that they were the ones that he loved best, and Nancy knew now that in her heart, her very secret heart, she had believed that Tom liked her. That some day—

[illegible] at every still with it didn't show! At least she could bear her pain in solitude.

Standing beside her window, she saw Aunt Myra coming up the path. Now for it! She must get it over.

"A wire from Tom!" she cried, wondering if that was her own voice.

She ran down the path. Aunt Myra did not look at her, but grasped the crumpled sheet and read it.

"What!" she cried, "You don't mean to say——" She was so startled herself that she did not see the stain of color that crept to Nancy's auburn hair.

"And he never let us know a thing about it. Sprung it on us this way——"

A little breeze touched the soft gray curls that showed about Aunt Myra's temples, but her face with its pleasant wrinkles looked older and grayer and more tired.

"I think," said Nancy, stooping to pick up a pink smartweed that was encroaching to the very steps of the porch, "that we'll have a lot to do, to make it pleasant for her, so that she won't feel strange."

Aunt Myra tightened her pressure on the girl's arm but she said nothing. It was not going to be so easy to accept Tom's wife when she had always hoped that things would turn out another way.

But Nancy did not give herself another moment to think. There were so many things to do. Tom would not want his own shabby, comfortable room up under the eaves now, but they must have the guest room.

Nancy put on the best spread and covered the top of the high-boy with the old lace cover that was laid away in lavender. Still it looked bare somehow, and she was not satisfied until she had brought the madonna from her own room and stood it on the white mantel and laid logs for a fire in the brick fireplace. Then she put the asters—the bridal pink—on the table and the low-boy in two jars over the mantel, and stood back to view her work. It did look pretty and comfortable and sweet, she thought.

And suddenly the gray walls heard a strange sound, for Nancy had slipped down and was burying her head in her arms while the tears she had held back all day strangled her, choked her as though they were fiery drops.

"I hate her! Hate her! Hate her!" Nancy cried passionately.

But some one else had heard those strangling sobs besides the cold gray walls. It was Tom Holbrook who kneeled down beside her and touched the red hair softly.

"Why, Nancy, girl, what is it?" he asked.

She turned her face to him, tear-stained, marked by misery and tried to smile.

[illegible] the—cook." Nancy

SHOW U. S. BUILDINGS

Notable Display Placed in Old Salon in Paris.

Photographs of 300 Structures Selected by Committee of the American Institute of Architects.

Paris.—An exhibit of photographs of a great number of notable buildings in the United States, public and private, constitutes an unusual feature of the annual exhibition of the Societe des Artistes Francais, popularly known as the Old Salon. Photographs of more than 300 exhibits from the leading American architects occupy a special section in the exhibition, a thing never before done in France.

The American collection was organized by a committee appointed by the American Institute of Architects.

Some of the best known buildings in America are shown. There are a few models, one of which is that of the Woolworth building in New York, which quickly attracts the eye because of its typical American design.

Numerous public and office buildings in other cities are shown, such as the city hall at Waterbury, Conn.; the Detroit Evening News building; the Bell Telephone building at Philadelphia; the Union Trust company building at Washington, D. C.; the Metropolitan Bank building in Minneapolis, and that of the First National bank in Boston.

Public buildings are represented by photographs of the Pan-American building at Washington, the New York public library, the Connecticut state library and Supreme court building at Hartford, Conn.; the Indianapolis public library, McKinley birthplace memorial, the United States post-offices in New York and Denver and the state capitals of Wisconsin and Missouri.

The ecclesiastical architecture is represented by photographs of the Chapel of the Intercession and the reredos of St. Thomas' church, both in New York; the chapel at West Point; the First Congregational church at Riverside, Cal., and St. Catherine's church of Boston.

Several buildings at Wellesley, Harvard and Princeton are among the educational buildings.

American architecture is further illustrated by photographs of the buildings of the Century, Harvard and University clubs of New York; the Country club of St. Louis; the University club of Chicago. Several hotels and theaters and typical American stores and manufacturing buildings are represented.

Notable American residences also are portrayed.

FOR AMERICANS IN WAR AREA

Hostess House to Be Opened at Laon, France, by American Committee for Devastated France.

Laon, France.—An American hostess house for the convenience of Americans planning to tour the battlefields of the Aisne and the Somme will be opened here by the American committee for devastated France. For 52 months the mansion it will occupy was the headquarters of the German command, and it has now been remodeled for the American traveler.

From the hostess house special motor trips under the direction of American chauffeurs will be arranged to the centers of the American committee at Soissons, Blerancourt, Anisy, Vic and Coucy.

The hostess house is near the Chemin des Dames region, which saw some of the hottest fighting of the war. It is on the route to the battlefields where Americans of the First, Second and Third armies fought under General Mangin.

Parents Act as Pupils.

250,000 LIVE IN DARK ROOMS

Detroit, Mich.—Two hundred and fifty thousand residents of Detroit are living in the dark.

This statement has been issued by the board of health housing department, following an investigation the amount of light present in [illegible] apartment houses.

ALL VIENNESE WEAR GREEN

Pronounced Change From Somber Color Which Has Been Worn in the Austrian Capital.

Revival of interest in commercial life in Austria has manifested itself in a contemplated "fair" and in a revival of fashions which include a new shade suggested perhaps by the general discontent, and called "malice" or "poison" green.

By means of the "fair" exposition, a new institution for Austria, business men hope to revive commerce by foreign merchants for which raw materials and semi-manufactures will be imported.

A certain revival of enterprise also is manifested in the prevailing fashion. In contrast to the rather monotonous shades of the last few years, modes revel in the extremest color—"giftgrun" ("malice green," "spiteful green," "arsenic green") is the color of the season. In the ballrooms dresses blaze forth in "malice green." In the streets this glaring green is subdued a little by black; but even in the most discreet robes the belt or tie must be lined with green, or from under the straw of coquettish little hats peep out coquettish little bows in "malice green."

Lost Suit Starts a Suit.

This is the tale of a generous tailor and a suit that brought about a suit. Vincent Ciccarelli of South Third street, Camden, N. J., is the tailor.

The tale, as told by Joseph Coantuno, of Fourth and Clinton streets, follows:

"I went to get my suit and the tailor had given it to another patron. Because of that I could not keep an engagement with my fiancee and we almost had a severe disagreement."

And so Coantuno brought suit for $200 to cover the loss of the suit and the "mental anguish suffered."

Both Expensive.

She—Your wife is such a dear sweet thing.

He—Yes, and so is our new flat, a dear suite thing.

California power plants were the first to use oil fuel under boilers.

ARTIST ONLY 18 MONTHS OLD

Two of Baby's Studies Exhibited in London Display of Drawing Society.

Cardiff, Wales.—Helen Williams of South Wales is stated to be the world's youngest artist. Her claim to this distinction is that, although she is only eighteen months old, she sits up in her cot every day and with a pencil and drawing board sketches the things that adorn her nursery.

Two of her studies from memory are being exhibited at the annual exhibition of the Royal Drawing society in London. Her pictures are an outline of a cat with a ribbon bow and a running gamecock.

Lapland Rich in Minerals.

Stockholm.—The Swedish geologists who made a survey of Lapland's mineral wealth by direction of parliament report that they discovered extensive copper deposits. One vein is more than fifty yards wide and of considerable thickness.

A mountain of potter's clay was found near Silverberg and Dikanas.

Near Stroemnaes are rich lime and cement deposits.

AGE OF MAMMALS IS ENDING

Destruction Has Progressed Rapidly Since Introduction of Guns and Steel Traps.

The beginning of the age of man, some half-million years ago, roughly estimated as the close of the age of mammals, marks in reality but the beginning of the close of the age of mammals. The extinction of the most superb mammals that the earth has ever produced, during the early stages of human evolution, progressed from natural causes due directly or indirectly to the Glacial epoch. With the introduction of firearms the destruction has proceeded with increasing rapidity, and today it is going on by the use of guns and steel traps, at a more rapid rate than ever.

By the middle of this century man will be alone amid the ruins of the mammalian world he has destroyed, the period of the age of mammals will have entirely closed, and the age of man will have reached a numerical climax, from which some statisticians believe it will probably recede, because we are approaching the point of the overpopulation of the earth in three of the five great continents.—Henry Fairfield Osborn in Natural History (Journal of the American Museum of N. H.)

Plausibility.

Colonel George Harvey said at a dinner in New York, apropos of high retail prices:

"A guest in a Florida hotel complained to the manager:

" 'Your restaurant is conducted in a very rotten way. At lunch today I found a hair in the ice cream, a hair in the honey, and a hair in the apple sauce.'

" 'Well, you see,' the manager explained, 'the hair in the ice cream came from the shaving of the ice. The hair in the honey came from the comb. But I can't for the life of me understand about the hair in the apple sauce, for I bought those apples myself, and they were all Baldwins.' "

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. Robbins will present these themes Sunday:

Morning: "Cheer up all ye sick ye can get absolutely well and work mightily for the Lord."

Evening: "Lovest thou Me? Then prove it not simply by your words, but your works."

None knowing the facts can doubt that the ministry of healing in answer to prayer by the pastor of the Memorial Baptist Church. The latest is the recovery of a sick and dying girl of lockjaw whom the doctors said could not get well but continuing having one convulsion after another till death came. They sent for pastor Robbins who, after lone prayer consented going. When first kneeling in prayer the girl had a terrible spasm which was the sixth that day. But stopping for a time continued the prayer that as the Lord had entrusted the key to lock and unlock the clouds in the care of Elijah, the key to unlock this child's jaws might be loaned to this pastor. The child is fast getting well. The doctors say they deserve no credit. If any have a doubt call up the Rev. Charles Beeb who was present and heard the prayer. Other wonderful healings in this church testify to the fact the day of miracles has not passed. Dr. Robbins always encourages the employing doctors and will never allow himself or others in his presence to criticise physicians. Why continue being sick when you might be well and strong?

YANK PRINCESS MAY BE QUEEN

Widow of Ralph Thomas May See Husband Acclaimed King of Albania.

LOSES HEART TO PRINCE

Princess Vlora is Granddaughter of Eugene Kelly, Millionaire New York Banker—Her First Husband Was Frank Jay Gould.

New York.—Princess Vlora, formerly Mrs. Helen Kelly Gould and more recently Mrs. Ralph Thomas, may be the first American to be addressed as "your majesty."

If she attains the throne of Albania, as seems possible, she bids fair to eclipse socially Princess Anastasia of Greece, formerly Mrs. William B. Leeds, who, through her marriage to Prince Christopher of Greece, has climbed the royal ladder higher than any other American woman.

Princess Vlora is in New York "on business," while her royal consort, Prince Vlora, is at their house in Paris arranging plans to ascend the throne of his grandfather.

The father of Vlora, Ferid Pasha, is prime minister to Abdul Hamid, and is working quietly with Turkish leaders.

She Prefers Paris.

"What will you do in Albania, where most of the men are polygamists and addicted to bloody feuds?" I asked her in her apartment in the Hotel Lenorie.

"I don't know," she said, smiling, "perhaps remain most of the time in my Paris home with my two children—Helen, who's nineteen, and Dorothy, who's seventeen—who are now in school in Switzerland."

The princess was Helen Margaret Kelly, granddaughter of the millionaire New York banker, Eugene Kelly. She was married at eighteen to Frank Jay Gould and after divorcing him married Ralph Thomas, son of the sugar king. After a brief married life, he died suddenly in 1914, leaving her several millions.

During the war she sailed for Paris where she became a war nurse. While recuperating in Switzerland, she told me, she met Prince Vlora, who was brooding over the fate of Albania and meditating schemes for its restoration.

Loses Her Heart.

"He told me sad stories of Albania," she continued, "of its wild scenery and the picturesqueness of its people. He was a delightful chap and I confess that I lost my heart to him. We were married quietly.

"Whether the prince will become king of Albania is not certain. It is well known in diplomatic circles that the problem of finding a satisfactory ruler is a hard one. The prince is the natural ruler and is mapping out his course in Paris and London now.

"Albania is the roughest country in the Balkans, a country of wild mountains, entirely without railroads. The only towns are situated on the coast of the Adriatic. The entire population is less than 1,500,000.

"The people consist mainly of fierce mountaineers, walking arsenals of rifles and knives. They are Mohammedans in religion and confirmed polygamists."

The princess explained that shortly before the war Prince William of Wied, with German and Austrian backing, succeeded in getting installed as king of Albania at Durazzo. He never succeeded, she said, in winning the allegiance of the mountaineers, because Essad Pasha and local chieftains were hostile to him. So he returned to Germany. Since then the Italians have occupied more of Albania and joined hands with the allies, operating from Saloniki.

"I am here to assist my husband in my own way," Princess Vlora said. "If he wants the throne he can have it.

"I am very much in love with him and will help him all I can, but I think I would prefer to spend most of my time in Paris.

"My mission here is to rest and to see certain friends on certain matters of importance."

Nation's Per Capita Wealth Now $2,800

The per capita wealth of the United States has increased $238 since 1914, it was announced by the Government Loan organization.

It is estimated that on Feb. 1, 1921, the total wealth of the country was $300,000,000,000. This is an increase of $50,000,000,000 during the last seven years.

If this wealth were divided equally among the 107,000,000 persons in the country each would have $2,800. In 1914 each would have had $2,564.

The practice of thrift during the war was partly responsible for the increase, according to the Loan organization.

'BANDIT QUEEN' TELLS OF LIFE

Reveals Romances Which Led to Her Arrest as Instigator of $23,000 Robbery.

HELD IN CORD OF CRIME

Left Home at 13 and Since Then Has Struck Out Against World—Rivals Fought for Her Hand When She Was Kitchenmaid.

Lead, S. D.—From the life of a kitchenmaid in Lead to the role of an alleged bandit queen, who inspired the $23,000 bank robbery which occurred in Denver recently, has been the experience of Edna Bock, who passed several years here.

The girl is twenty-three years old. While she was living in Lead several fights were started between young men who were rivals for her hand.

After leaving Lead the girl continued her romantic conquests, and it is said a man was killed in Minneapolis last fall because of her. The $23,000 bank robbery in Denver was brought on because of the extravagant tastes of the girl and the man with whom she has now been living. They were arrested in a fashionable Denver residence.

An interview published in the Denver Post follows:

Edna Carroll, the alleged "bandit queen," who answers to three other names equally dressy, including that of "Mickey," is twenty-three years old.

Hustled a Living.

For ten years this girl, companion of Thomas J. Coleman, one of the three men who robbed Stockyards National bank employees of $23,000, has been what she calls "hustling" a living, and in those ten years she has added to inherited memories a mass of wisdom concerning good and evil.

At twenty-three this girl with the bright coloring, black hair and level gazing eyes has the lives of two men linked to her own with the cord of crime, the police say.

One of these, R. E. Cavanaugh, she thought so much of that she bought the wedding ring for the third finger of her left hand and wore it when she consented to "beat the town and go away with him for better or worse." Cavanaugh, a mechanic, was killed in Minneapolis last year, and Miss Carroll, her wedding ring still gleaming from her finger, returned to Denver.

"Then I met Coleman," she said. "He sat at the same table with me in a restaurant, and, since in my set we don't wait for introductions, we began to talk, and as he was the second man I've met that I wanted to marry I agreed to give up my business and go with him. We had great plans. These plans included things I had never thought of before."

Then Edna "Mickey" Carroll digressed and told what life had been up to the time she met Coleman, the dapper, dandy "oil broker," at the cafe.

"First off, I wish to remark that I have no use for women," she said, with a thin smile that challenged a retort. "I never knew one that would not double-cross you sooner or later, and most always sooner. My aunt gave me my first impression of what women really are. I was born in South Dakota and got tired of living at home and at thirteen I left and went to Lead to work as a housemaid.

"There I earned $15 a month and got roasted for everything I did and did not do.

Took Easiest Way.

"I decided that this sort of work didn't agree with me, and as I had not been educated to do any other kind I took the easiest way."

"Easiest?" was asked.

"Not always; most times terribly hard," she answered.

"I made a lot of money and saved it, and sometimes I shared it with a sick pal. But by the time I met Coleman I had saved $8,000, with which I bought the automobile they're making so much fuss over. That was my money. I earned it and not a cent was his.

"Tom always seemed to have plenty of money, and as he suggested that we would rent a house for a little while, buy a car and later go away and set ourselves up in a rooming house that would bring us in an income I didn't see any need of taking off my wedding ring.

"I'd dreamed of a home, a husband, good clothes and a car and a maid to wait on us. The dream came true. And when, on our first evening at home, a neighbor called as we were at dinner, the dream was too good to last. Yesterday Tom told me he had bought a suit of clothes at a downtown store and asked me if I would go and get it for him. When I got back to the house things had blown up and here I am."

All in the Day's Work.

Ashland, Ky.—Frank Forson, fireman on the A. C. & I. railroad, is entitled to a hero medal. When Ed Crawford, engineer of the fast train, sent his engine around a curve he was horrified to see a baby standing in the middle of the track. It was too late to stop even though he threw on the brakes. Forson grasped the situation, ran out on the pilot, swung himself down and grasped the child as the iron wheels approached, and lifted it to safety. The engine was brought to a standstill fifty feet further on and the baby turned over to the frantic mother, who had witnessed the rescue from afar.

Breaking It Gently.

"Oh, mamma," said little Charlie, "I've upset the salt-cellar over the clean tablecloth!"

"That was very careless," answered mother, "but go and brush the salt off, and see that you don't spoil the table cloth."

"But, mother, when any one spills salt they have a quarrel, don't they?" Charlie now asked.

"Yes, that is so," agreed the mother. "But why do you ask?"

"Well, mother," continued Charlie, "if they don't spill the salt they don't have a quarrel, do they?"

"No," answered mother. "That's quite right, but I can't see why you ask."

"Well, mother," replied Charlie, getting his back to the wall, "it wasn't the salt I spilled, it was the ink!"

The Shoe That Pinched.

The minister is not the only person who sometimes steps on people's toes at church. At one church the other morning two young women members who had been up late the night before were having difficulty to keep awake. One of them turned to the other and whispered, "I'm going to doze off a minute. Watch and don't let me snore."

Then was announced the choir's next song. It began, "Arise, awake and put fresh vigor on."

The two young women both did so, too.—Indianapolis News.

Apprehensive.

She had just received a proposal of marriage from a man she had always regarded more in the light of a brother than a lover.

"Janet," he began, "you know I have always turned to you; that I have always thought of you. May I—that is—oh, will you be my wife?"

"What a start you gave me, Henry," said Janet at last. "Do you know I thought from your manner that you were going to ask me to lend you some money?"

Politeness Paid.

"My butcher congratulated me today on the rumor that clothes are going down."

"Well?"

"He was so nice about it that, of course, I couldn't kick when he charged me a little more for meat."—Detroit Free Press.

The Young Man in the Little Red Room

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Molly Blair came home from the office that night and found her aunt lying on the couch in the basement dining room groaning with rheumatism.

"I'm sorry, dear," said Mrs. Hayes, feebly, "but you will have to get supper tonight—and there's the poor blind boy up in the little red room—I don't believe he's had a bit to eat today!"

"Oh, dear," sighed Molly; "I'm so sorry, auntie—there, you must not worry a bit now. Close your eyes and take forty winks—then you shall have broth, and bread, too, and a cup of my own tea." The girl put away her outdoor garments and hid her pretty dress under a great apron that was vastly becoming. She went into the kitchen, raked the fire, put the kettle on to boil and pushed the pot of soup over the coals. Then she skimmed over the stairs of the gloomy old house like a swallow, lighting the gas in bathrooms, halls and landings so that the roomers might find their way in. Most of the roomers took their meals at the boarding house next door, but since young Harvey had come home one night half blinded by a chemical experiment in the factory where he was employed Mrs. Hayes had served his meals to him in his darkened room and she never breathed to a soul that the young fellow was in arrears for room and food. There was something mysterious about Ronald Harvey and the good woman held her counsel and gave him motherly care until this day when stricken by her old enemy, rheumatism.

When Molly had taken a bowl of steaming soup and tea and toast up to the darkened red room on the third floor and had placed the tray on the table near the door and backed silently out, she brought her own supper tray to her aunt's couch and they ate supper together.

"The doctor says—" hesitated Mrs. Hayes between sips of tea, "that I'll have to remain here on this couch in this room for several weeks—my old heart bothers me a bit, too."

"Auntie!" cried the girl remorsefully: "I ought never to have gone into the office—you needed me here, and yet"—youth's yearning for freedom and the companionship of other young things clouded her eyes.

"I know, dearie, I know—" sighed Mrs. Hayes, "but I'm afraid you'll have to stay home with me this winter."

Molly choked down the rest of her tea and cleared the supper away. At last she came back, looking very pale and wistful, but smiling. "I'll telephone to the office in the morning," she said cheerfully, "and if they can't spare me, why, they will have to, auntie. I cannot have you making yourself sick with overwork and having horrid old rheumatism, 'n everythin'!"

"My Molliegirl—I knew you would do it cheerfully," sighed Mrs. Hayes. "Of course it's horribly dull here for a young thing like you, making up beds and sweeping and looking after things, but romance isn't always riding down the street on a white horse, and who knows—" she smiled drowsily and slept, while Molly crept away to the kitchen to pick up the neglected work. Perhaps a few tears dropped into the dish water, perhaps there was a sleepless night for the girl who had just found joy in the daily companionship of her young fellow-workers, but Mrs. Hayes had always been like a mother to little orphaned Molly, and so the girl presented a cheerful face the next morning when she began the old dull routine.

"I wouldn't mind so much if it was a pretty, new house with lovely things—no, even plain things—and there—" she always blushed when she peopled her dreams with the visionary lover and husband. So Molly became a busy dreamer once more.

Her brief office experience had taught her the value of method and she applied this knowledge to her work in the house and never had the rooms been so well cared for. Three times a day she carried meals up to the young man in the red room, until he asked if he might not be piloted down to the lower floor.

"I want to eat with real folks once more," he said in his pleasant whimsical way.

"You will save me miles of running up and down," laughed Molly, who wished he would remove his bandage so that she could see if his eyes were as good as his firm mouth and chin. She liked his voice and his smile seen dimly in the darkened room, and when he came into the upper hall and she saw the brown of his skin and the muscular frame she felt a queer little thrill. He rested a hand on her shoulder and she thrilled once more. He towered above her now, for she was tiny, and he laughed teasingly at her fright when he stumbled.

Sometimes Molly read to him from dry chemical books, or articles in some scientific magazine, and once when she fell asleep over a lengthy description of a new process he leaned over and groped for her hand, but his fingers only touched her soft brown hair.

"Describe her, Mrs. Hayes," he whispered to the other invalid, who could now sit in a chair and knit.

Mrs. Hayes responded with twinkling eyes. "She's little, like a kitten, her hair is soft and brown and her eyes are blue and she has a real pink and white skin, and—"

Molly's perfect lips quivered and then little crinkles came about her eyes.

"And she smiles in her sleep when people talk about her!" she interrupted wickedly.

"Oh, Molly!" chided her aunt.

"Ah, Molly Hayes!" muttered Ronald Harvey, turning quite white.

Mrs. Hayes bobbled away, for the atmosphere was highly charged with unsaid things. Her swift backward glance was a "Bless-you-my-child."

"What is the matter?" asked Molly bravely.

Ronald smiled. "Love," he said tersely.

"Oh!" Molly shivered, and it was a pity he could not see her face.

"I'm in love—with—you—and some day—I'm going to marry you, if you—don't mind. I'll be all right in another week, and there'll be plenty of money when I get back to the works again. You don't say a word. Molly, is there anybody else?"

"No—no," she said softly.

He was holding her hands tightly. "We'll have a little home somewhere. Auntie and you and I—you won't mind?"

Molly's head drooped toward his. "I don't mind," she breathed gently.

Mrs. Hayes peered in at them. "Romance begins at home," she nodded approvingly as she tiptoed away.

"Rebecca's Triumph," the three act drama which was presented at West High School Auditorium, Tuesday evening for the benefit of St. Cecilias Church, Galloway, under the direction of Mrs. Joseph Bopeley, assisted by Mrs. Frank Aloysius Reinhardt, was a wonderful success. Great interest and delight was shown throughout the performance by a fair sized audience which would have been much larger but for the heavy rain which came up just when most of the members of the church and their friends were about to start from home around and about Galloway. Owing to this the cast was asked to repeat it which will be at Grove City some evening next week. An excellent orchestra added to the pleasure of those present, all claiming that it was beyound their expectations. The date of the Grove City performance will be given in our next issue.

CRITICISM

"It's easy enough to pick out the flaws,
In the work that others have done,
Point out the errors others have made,
When your task you haven't begun;

It's easy enough to fuss and find fault,
When others are doing their best,
Sneer at the little they have achieved,
When you have done nothing but rest.

It's easy enough to cavil and carp,
To criticise, scoff and deride,
Few of us ever have done perfect work,
No matter how hard we have tried,

It's easy enough not to speak of the best,
To dwell all the time on the worst,
Perhaps it's proper sometimes to find fault
But be sure you've done something first."

THE ANGEL MESSAGE SONG

I have found the glorious gospel that was taught in former years,
With its gifts and blessings all so full and free;
And my soul is thrilled with gladness, and banished are my fears.
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Then praise the Lord, oh, my soul!
Abundant mercy, oh, how free!
In joyful song thy Spirit doth accord,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

I wandered long in darkness, yet sought the narrow way,
And my life was like the surging of the sea;
But now I am rejoicing in this the latter day,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

My once blind eyes are open, my sins are washed away,
And the kingdom I can very plainly see;
No more do fears and doubtings my trusting soul dismay,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Now for celestial glory, in the presence of the Lord,
I will work and watch and humbly bow the knee;
No longer faith, but knowledge, in true and sweet accord.
With the precious Angel Message brought to me.

—James L. Edward.

Rev. A. E. Cowley Resigns.

To the regret of many of his friends, Rev. A. E. Cowley resigned as pastor of the Hill Crest Baptist Church to accept the call of the First Baptist Church of Livonia, N. Y. He will close his work here on the last Sunday in July. His work has been deeply appreciated by many in and many outside of his own church.

Publisher Hilltop Record: Permit me through these columns to express on behalf of myself, personally, and my church and the Baptists of this city my deep regret in the presentation of the resignation last Sunday of the Rev. A. E. Cowley as pastor of the Hill Crest Baptist Church. This young pastor and preacher and student deserves unstinted praise in that while pursuing a college course and receiving at the late commencement the degree of Bachelor of Arts, he has at the same strenuous time preached every Sunday morning and light fresh, bright, scholarly, interesting sermons and done a mighty lot of pastoral calling. He has wrought a great work in this church and the Hilltop. Few have been his critics, many his friends and admirers. He is a manly man among men. While we are sorrowful because we shall soon see his smiling face no more among us, we are glad he is going to such a much larger and greatly more desirable church and likewise to have the opportunity of completing his theological education in one of the best Baptist theological seminaries in America. His manifold friends, both within and without the church, run in to many thousands in Columbus. He leaves soon with the best wishes of the best people, knowing his worth and work. Gratefully,

G. R. ROBBINS.

The Artist and His Helpmeet

By MARTHA M'WILLIAMS.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mamselle told me the story—Mamselle, who exhales the aroma of old Paris here amid the turmoil of big New York. We were but part of the picture in a gathering of celebrities—the most celebrated, of course, set in the forefront of battle, high on a rostrum for all to see and hear. Never mind what for—our talk didn't in the least interrupt anything. We were rather far back, and in a sort of eddy that saved us from crowding yet gave us a clear view.

"Look! O, the good fellow, bon! bon!" Mamselle ejaculated as a fine, straight figure, not overly tall but crowned with a face that was like a benediction, came clearer into view.

"He is good! So good! Also he is great. But his wife is greater. She made him—he will tell you so if you give him the chance. He had not need to tell me. You see, I saw the making. In Paris—the two of them were there—in a house away from all the world—except the people thick about who did not count. They paid 900 francs yearly for the small place—tiny is no name for it—but it sheltered love and art and happiness—and a real lionheart. A woman heart at that. Madame, you see yonder," nodding toward a majestic yet appealing figure beside the man. "When they married in America he was all business—at the office all day—her people called him rising—she was happy though they had not much money—but after a little she saw he was not.

"'What is it?' she asked him. He told her—he wanted to paint. 'Then do it!' she said. 'There is the night school. You can at least try it.' But after a month he say: 'It is not enough. I must have the day also.' 'Then take it!' she said. 'We shall manage—somehow.'

"He obeyed—quit his work—painted, painted. Oh, very bad things, no doubt—but somehow he could not stop. By and by, unknown to her, he even painted signs—in time she thought he spent walking. Presently he told her: 'I must have Paris.' 'You shall have it,' she say back to him. So they make ready to go. Somebody wished to lend them money—he will not take it. 'I might never pay it back,' he say. But they come—they find the house—she does everything in it—cooks, washes, sews, mends—makes over garments kind people send her, tends the little garden—it helps them to eat.

"She is so kind she would cook my potatoes with her own. I will not have it—she say I must not pay. I find her always smiling, always singing, clean and beautiful, her house fresh as spring—her hands never idle one minute of the day. She goes errands now and then, she reads to a blind man, she takes out the dog of a rich charcutiere. Oh, there is nothing honest she will not do to help m'sieur the artist. He works too—terribly, wasting no daylight, driving himself as though he were a troll. You do not know the trolls? We believe in my country that they could, if they chose do the work of the world, never tiring, but that they help only a little, fearing men will harness them so tight they will never get free again. I wished sometimes a great troll would help him—being so strong they must know much more than poor mortals.

"M'sieur, the artist, worked many ways. Sometimes he made a little profit from it—never much. And it went for paints and canvas—pictures do not grow like flowers. Many times when he looked gaunt with hunger she begged him to let her ask the help that only waited on asking. He would not. So they lived on, keeping house, for all their shifts, many times with hunger and thirst.

"But they work on—they love on. No repinings, no harsh words. She sings and sweeps and darns and patches, always the lady, almost the grande dame, always the kindly human soul, eager to help all she can if by chance she find a place for helping. They belong, those two, to the soul-aristocracy, which alone is real. Maybe they loved the better, drew the closer, for the hard life. I do not know—but surely they were happy, in spite of their grim housework.

"By and by came the third season. He sent a picture to the salon. It was hung—well hung, praised—well praised; people flocked about it—there were offers of purchase. But somehow he hung back—he wanted all the sunshine of knowing it valued, on those walls, to shine in his heart.

"But after a little while he said to madame: 'Now you may write. I will not let you starve and freeze and work fingers to the bone any longer. I am artist—I have shown it. I can paint, I can sell. Write instantly to the kind soul who would have helped us. Tell him we accept—and pocket our pride so far as not asking him to accept other security than ourselves.'

"But behold—before madame got pen and paper—came the postman with a letter from America. It said: 'I hear you are not living, but suffering—that I cannot permit to go on. Spend the money inclosed with free hearts—more will come quarterly, so long as you may need it.'

"As if that were not enough, came a dealer with a patron—who gave a price unbelievable for the salon masterpiece. Now, if he chose he could sell it for ten times as much—even though the world has many other pictures from that same hand. M'sieur went up, up, straight up.

"But a while they kept to the small house—only making it fresh and fine within and without. 'This is how we give thanks for its shelter,' madame said. She made me sometimes come and stay with them—cooking potatoes for the unchallenged—but she did not raise them herself. She forgot nobody, slighted nobody—read now and then to the blind man, and once at least took out the wheezy dog. And the poor—I cannot tell you all she did for them—because she herself would never tell any of it.

"By and by they went otherwheres—I also did the same. But so long as they stayed abroad I saw them at intervals. When long after they had come home I followed them to America, they were nearly the first to welcome me and wish me luck. They are full of goodness. Poverty and privation left no scars on their souls—I think because throughout they loved so much it overflowed to life and all that live. No—I will not to go to them now—leave them to the people who rejoice in them only as celebrities. But next month I am asked for a seashore fortnight. I shall go—I shall bathe and swim in spite of my gray hair—and, talking over youth and Paris, all of us will forget that they are gray.

"M'sieur says rightly God gave him a helpmeet—that without her he would have been less than nothing. I do not know—having no husband nor wife. But it seems to me it was the pulling together that brought these two into the land of heart's desire."

POLISHING THEIR OWN SHOES

Ex-Service Man Tells Bootblack Why So Many Army Men Now Take Care of Footgear.

"Gee whiz! You was a soldier wasn't you?" asked Jimmie, the bootblack, as he got out his round box of paste and the necessary brushes and cloths. "I knew that by the button you're wearin' there. But, say mister, there's somepun I would like to know from one of you fellers.

"Shoot ahead," said the ex-service man, leaning against the park railing in City Hall place.

"Why," began Jimmie, applying the polish, "why ain't our business as good as it was before the war? No, it ain't, mister. These young fellers who came back don't get as many shines of us as they used to. It seems to be a kinda dress occashun with 'em."

"Well, I'll tell you, Jimmie," the veteran said. "We had to shine our own in the army. When most of us got back the habit was with us, so we bought us a little box of polish and a brush. We're feelin' natural by doing them ourselves. Sorry to hurt your business, Jimmie."—New York Times.

Their Strong Point.

"Great governor!" ejaculated a hypercritical guest. "I never witnessed such a riot as your volunteer fire department stages when there is an alarm. While the fire bell is ringing they run about like wild men and yell as if being tortured. They are lucky if they do not upset the hose reel in getting it out of the shed. When they finally arrive at the fire they do little but get in each other's way, howl like dervishes, and smash things with axes until the conflagration burns itself out."

"I presume so," replied the landlord of the tavern at Wayoverbehind. "But look at their sincerity, man! They couldn't be any more deeply interested if 'twas their own homes that were bein' holocausted."—Kansas City Star.

An Even Break.

"How are you getting along, old top, in your courtship with old man Brown's daughter?"

"Fair enough."

"Hasn't he kicked on you burning up his coal and gas all winter?"

"How could he so long as he burned up my cigars?"

School Principal's Trailing Arbutus

By LAURA REID MONTGOMERY.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Something kinda nice about him," ruminated the blonde at the telegraph office in the Sixty-third street station.

"We went to school together," said Edith stiffly. She felt that Emma had fallen into the acquaintanceship very easily and she didn't quite like it.

There were few travelers that morning and Edith did not sell very many magazines. After she had dusted and arranged her stock of brightly colored wares she had nothing to do but think.

Emma was knitting a softly tinted couch cover, for she was to be married in a few months, and Edith felt that it was scarcely decorous for the pretty, rather bold blonde to chat so vivaciously with her customers. The man who had bought his morning paper at the newsstand and then nodded a pleasant good-morning at the telegraph booth was called the professor.

Edith, lost in a brown study, reviewed the years that had passed since they had gone to school in the village thirty miles up the line. She, also, had planned to teach, but for several reasons she had decided that the years of preparation were too costly, and she had remained a clerk.

Ed, on the contrary, had gone steadily ahead, and he was now principal in the grammar school in their home town, but, as there was no library there, and he was constantly studying, he found that he could not keep abreast of his subjects there, and he boarded in Chicago and went back and forth to school every day. He often stopped to talk with the little dark-eyed woman who had charge of the magazines, and sometimes made an additional purchase after buying his paper.

Edith sometimes wondered if his life was as drab as hers. Always reticent, he had grown silent as the years passed and his hair was touched with silver at the temples. This she secretly admired, and even the rubbers which afforded much amusement to the frivolous Emma failed to be funny in her loyal eyes.

Evenings Edith usually spent in her back room at the boarding house, for there were many things to be done to keep her wardrobe in its usual exquisite order, but sometimes she would let her work drop in her lap and dream. Would the years ahead be as barren as the last two since she had been alone in the city? Would she keep on making dainty blouses and frilly little neck things to become quickly spoiled by the soot and smoke of the city, with no one to care how she looked or felt?

"Hello, Edith!"

A bright spring morning would often cause her to dress with little excited thrills and hum low snatches of some old song. Something lovely must surely happen on such a day of gold and pink. But the end of the day would often find her frantically adding her sales and counting her change to find out where a stubborn dime had hidden itself, and the greatest good luck that occurred would be when her accounts balanced. She regretted now that she was not teaching back in the home grammar school, for she would be among her former friends and neighbors.

A sudden blur of pink and white with the fragrant scent of early spring, aroused her and she saw Ed standing before her with a smile upon his rather pale face.

"Danny Smith brought these from the grove," he said, watching her big gray eyes brighten. "Guess they are the first found around there."

"Lovely," breathed Edith, burying her tip-tilted nose in the waxlike flowers.

With a hurried nod he was swept on with the crowd and the magazine girl tucked the cluster into the folds of her silk blouse.

"Say, you got them after all," called Emma crossly from her counter. "He stopped here, but a fat traveling man was sending a night letter and I guess he got tired waiting. Seems to me you ought to divide," she added as a wave of color swept across Edith's face.

Late that evening she walked home rather wearily. Two of the younger girl boarders were already through dinner and were sitting on the front steps waiting for their friends to come to take them out for the evening. The fresh young faces under the carefully waved hair and the pretty slim feet in their high-heeled pumps made Edith feel rather elderly, for she saved part of her salary each week toward a little home in the future.

"I am raising the board a dollar a week," announced her landlady as she gave Edith her pudding. "The cost of food is soaring and so greatly that I may have to raise again before long, too," she added as the girl's eyes gazed back at her in dismay.

Edith had just removed her flowers, intending to put them in her tooth brush mug to keep fresh for the next day, when there was a tap on her door.

"A man to see you, Miss Jones. Land's sake, you never had a man call on you before, but then I suppose he's an insurance agent." Mrs. Miller's sharp eyes dwelt upon the tired face before her as she speculated. "He wouldn't give his name."

"Thank you, Mrs. Miller." Edith's tone was colorless, but once again the thrill of spring seized her.

From the house next door came a languorous love song, the rather dingy lace curtains stirred in a breeze straight from the lake laden with a spicy sweetness that even the flight across the city had not lessened. From the tiny flowers in the common china mug nodded a call of the woods—of glossy green leaves against the lingering patches of snow in cool hollows.

She rearranged her hair slowly, dallying with the pleasure of anticipation. It might be most any one waiting in that stiff, garishly furnished front parlor with its heavy odors of long-eaten meals—with the grim atmosphere of loveless lives that had tarried for a brief stay and then flitted to, perhaps, a worse environment. It probably was an insurance agent, as Mrs. Miller had unkindly surmised, but if so he could wait.

Edith smiled back at her shadowy reflection in the pale mirror. She would pretend that she was dressing for an escort—one who would bring a beribboned box of candy and who would masterfully assist her down the steps as she had seen the trim-belted young fellows do when they went laughingly down with the girls who now waited on the steps.

Tucking the flowers back in their silken nest, she turned slowly away and went sedately downstairs. No one must guess at the joyous riot of spring that had suddenly pervaded her drab evening. She was a young woman going down to her company in the front parlor and the gay smile still lingered knows she cared for Ed in that way. But the gold and pink of other spring days that had begun so happily and ended in the fatigue of a hard day among the garish colors of railway literature were as nothing to the present.

She lifted her head and listened, for he had gone on talking excitedly, his reticence of the past forgotten.

"I couldn't speak sooner, for the life was too hard, but now, Edith, I thought of the new, soft, green bungalow on the street south of the high school. We are going to have a library in it, and think of the pleasure of choosing the books."

"And we'll always have a bowl of arbutus in the spring," murmured the girl, feeling glad she had divided her cluster with Emma. After all, the years were filled with joy.

The Natural End.

The "actors" whom Willie knows most about are those who do lofty feats in the circus and vaudeville. He has a proper appreciation of the danger of their calling and the means adopted for their safety. Recently he heard his father, while reading a book on theatricals, mention the name of Sir Henry Irving.

"Who is Sir Henry Irving, father?" asked the boy.

"He was a great actor," said the father.

"What show is he with?"

"He isn't with any show now. He's dead?"

"What happened? Did he miss the pet?"—Harper's.

The Finishing Touch.

Jean, colored cook at a certain country club, makes hash that has no equal. The fame of the dish is great, but the secret of its excellence eluded everyone until one day a member of the club complimented Jean on her skill.

"How do you do it?" he asked. "I never get hash like yours anywhere else."

Jean's black face glowed with pleasure at the compliment. "Beef is nothin'," she replied, "Potatoes is nothin', peppah's nothin', onions is nothin'; but when ah th'ows myself into de hash—dat's what makes it what it is!"—Youth's Com[illegible]

Smallest Will in N. J. Contains Only 55 Words

New York.—The smallest will ever filed in the office of the Surrogate of Essex County, New Jersey, is that of W. Makepeace of 180 Summit av., Montclair, which has just been admitted to probate. It was written on a sheet of note paper, wrinkled and stained, measuring about six by three inches. It is also one of the shortest ever filed in the county, containing fifty-five words. Mr. Makepeace, who died March 27, bequeated all his property, valued at about $1,500, to his wife.

OWNS ENTIRE VILLAGE

Bought Turnerville and Hung Own Name on Place.

Owing to Impaired Health, C. M. Ams Now Seeks to Relieve Himself of Burden of Honor.

Colchester, Conn.—Owning an entire village and reigning supreme as the boss of the hamlet has lost its charms for C. M. Ams of Mount Vernon, N. Y., principally because of impaired health, and he is soon to relieve himself of the burden of that honor.

In December, 1912, Mr. Ams became sole proprietor of the then Village of Turnerville, lying between Willimantic and Middletown on the Air Line division of the New Haven railroad and a few miles from Colchester.

The attractive feature of the village is its wonderful water power. At the top of a hill overlooking it is a lake a mile and a quarter square, fed by hidden springs which never fail, and the water can be led down so as to produce between 800 and 1,000 horse power.

The first man to perceive the value of this lake was the one for whom the place was originally named—P. W. Turner, who started the silk industry there. He employed over 200 men and erected about fifty tenements for their accommodation. When Mr. Turner died, in 1903, his son and widow attempted to carry on the business, but with only fair success.

In 1909 the whole property, including four factories, the lake, the village store and hotel and over 2,000 acres of land, was sold to J. Eisensen & Co. and David Brown, who operated walking cane and silk factories in New York and New Jersey. They moved their factories to Turnerville but suffered reverses. Fires destroyed two of the four buildings, and of the two remaining at the time of Mr Ams' advent one was being run as a cane factory and the other was idle.

When Mr. Ams took possession of the village he got legislative permission to change its name to "Amston." Taking up his residence in the old Turner homestead, he set to work to develop and beautify the site and its surroundings. One of his first benefactions was a bird sanctuary, where the habits of wild birds were studied by Prof. Herbert K. Job, one of the specialists at the State Agricultural college at Storrs. The old hotel was replaced by a modern inn, and improvements were made all along the line.

The many friends of Mr. L. W. Johnson, North Terrace St., will give him a benefit lawn fete on the corner of Richardson and Broad, Wednesday evening, July 13, this being his birthday anniversay. Mr. Johnson, who has been an invalid for several years, is well known on the Hilltop. He has, in his crippled condition, been making a noble fight in the game of earning a living by making candies at his home, getting around in the room by the aid of a wheel chair. But the high cost of supplies the past few years has made it very hard to do anything in the candy line and therefore worked a hardship on this worthy man. Hence his friends are coming to his aid in the above named lawn fete. Ice cream and cake will be served for 20 cents. If you are called upon to buy tickets be sure and take one for each of the whole family (and then some).

Glenwood Camp No. 7688 Royal Neighbors of America, will hold a social on the lot east of Dr. Turner's office, Friday evening, July 8. Ice cream and home-made cake, 15 cents; also soft drinks.

The school will reopen on September 12.

Miss Ethel Greiser, who has been playing at the East Broad Baptist Temple will resume her work there as regular organist on her return in September.

JACKSON LIKES PETTICOAT RULE

After Year's Trial of Government by Women, Wyoming Town Is Satisfied.

IS NOW QUIET AND ORDERLY

Place Once Rendezvous for Desperadoes Transformed by the Women—Now Kept Clean Morally and Physically—Many Reforms

Jackson, Wyo.—Jackson, after a year's trial of petticoat government, has found it good.

Half a century ago the first jury of women to be impaneled in the United States was drawn in Wyoming and 20 years later Wyoming insisted, and won its point, that it be admitted to the Union without one single change in its constitutional provision giving women equal suffrage rights with men. Since then the feminist movement has developed astoundingly. And so, when the votes were counted at Jackson at the recent election, they showed the following results:

For mayor: Mrs. Grace Miller, 57; L. W. Spicer, 21. For councilmen: Mrs. Genevieve Van Vleck, 67; G. R. Blaine, 19; Mrs. Faustina Haight, 66; Almer Nelson, 18.

Turn the Men Out.

Just a year ago the picturesque little western town, with a population of 526, by the latest census, nestling beneath the beetling peaks of the giant Tetons in the heart of the famed Jackson's Hole country, startled the nation by turning out its man-made administration and installing a town government made up entirely of women. The victory was all the more notable because of the fact that Mrs. Rose Crabtree had been elected to the town council over her own husband. Evidently the women of Jackson had decided to spoil the town's glamorous reputation as the rendezvous for bad, bold, two-gun desperadoes.

The exact issue in the campaign a year ago was a matter for argument, but whatever it was the women won decisively. This year it was the same thing over, a three-to-one landslide.

During the year's tenure, the five women of the town's administration managed to keep Jackson clean, morally and physically, and in addition, they brought about a number of municipal improvements. They transformed what used to be country lanes into city streets; they acquired a site for a cemetery to take the place of the old, familiar burying ground; and they are now working on a plan for a modern, adequate water system to replace the present system of irrigating ditches fed by near-by Cache creek.

Stand Pat on Records.

Two of the councilwomen are hold overs this year. The other two, along with the mayor, stood pat on their records. The mayor, Mrs. Miller, is the wife of a wealthy retired stockman and rancher, who is supervisor of the Teton national forest reserve. Of the councilwomen, Mrs. Crabtree runs a hotel. Her husband is a building contractor. Mrs. Van Vleck is the wife of a hardware merchant. Mrs. Haight is a school teacher and a homesteader, and Mrs. W. C. DeLoney's husband is a member of the Wyoming state legislature.

A few days after the election, Miss Pearl Williams, the town's twenty-two-year-old marshal, announced that she would not seek reappointment of the new administration. When asked why not, she replied: "I've had plenty. Besides, Jackson has become so quiet and orderly that the town doesn't need a marshal any more."

MAY PERFECT GAS WARFARE

British Expert Declares Chemicals Less Cruel Than Other Weapons of War.

London.—Sir William J. Pope, professor of chemistry at Cambridge university and president of the Society of Chemical Industry, asserts in The Chemical Age that chemical warfare has come to stay, and pleads for an open recognition by the government of poison gas research.

He says that in the war poison was less fatal and far less cruel than any other weapon; and points out that it would be simple to devise high explosive shells which would liberate large quantities of carbon monoxide, against which all known protective measures are useless.

"No reason," he says, "exists why a chemical should not be made which does not kill, but produces local anaesthesia, causes violent sneezing for a few hours, or leads to some form of physiological intoxication which may prove of great military value."

A REVOLUTION in RETAIL GROCERY SELLING

Retail grocers of Columbus reduce high cost of living by an effective selling movement which insures lower prices to consumers and meets public demand for big savings

About 130 retail grocers of Columbus have formed what is considered the most effective organization for the saving of money this city has ever known. Seven of these grocers are located on the Hilltop.

These grocers, for the first time in history, are co-operating to meet the public demand for lower prices. With the added co-operation of manufacturers and jobbers, this has been made possible and, commencing Friday, July 1, and continuing each Friday thereafter, in The Columbus Dispatch and Citizen will be found a list of tempting grocery bargains effective Saturday morning and the week following. These will prove HANDY SERVICE STORES that will effect savings for you, which amounts to many dollars.

With many families facing a reduction of income or wages, buying of groceries must be more carefully done and pennies saved wherever possible.

The "HANDY SERVICE STORE" is a permanent part of your city. The hundred or more grocers in the movement own their own storerooms, their own homes, employ hundreds of clerks, pay thousands of dollars in taxes, support other Columbus institutions and help make our city a better place to live in. This movement has found its consummation in the development of what is known as the "HANDY SERVICE STORES."

These grocers are in the movement wholeheartedly and with the greatest desire to be of service to Columbus housewives.

How the System Works

Only stores bearing the "HANDY SERVICE STORE" signs will be able to sell merchandise at advertised prices. This is due to the fact that the grocers in this co-operative movement are alive to the needs of the times and are co-operating solely to aid you in securing a saving on your groceries.

The grocer standing alone and selling in small quantities is unable to meet competition, but when 130 or more co-operate, they together are enabled to sell in large quantity, at quantity prices, and are able to effect savings for you which will amount to considerable.

The "HANDY SERVICE STORE" sign is your guarantee that you can secure merchandise at your favorite grocery at lower cost. Your grocer, listed here, is content to secure his profits through quantity sales, rather than through restricted sales. We are living in an age of quantity selling. The successes of the mail order houses, department stores, and chain stores lie in their great selling power, but no store or chain of stores in Columbus has the selling power of these combined groceries.

Your neighborhood grocer is reliable, conscientious, accommodating and honest. You will have cause for great rejoicing in this announcement. We assure you that the store prominently displaying the "HANDY SERVICE STORE" signs will sell you honest merchandise at cheaper prices than you can obtain elsewhere. Look for the first Friday advertisement, published July 1st. It will show you startling price reductions on groceries.

Increase in Building

From the first of January 1921 up to date 2078 Building Permits have been issued in our city. This is an increase of almost three times the number of Permits issued during the entire year of 1920.

Reasons for This Increase

The cost of building materials have been greatly reduced. In many cases in our own yards they have been reduced as much as 40 percent. Deliveries now can be made promptly, labor is far more plentiful now than in the past four years. It is easier to obtain money from the Building and Loan Associations than for some time past. All these factors make building possible.

If you are thinking of building we advise you to build now; with the increase in building in a short time both building materials and skilled labor will be hard to obtain.

Drop in and see us any time and let us know your building needs. You will find us ready at all times to serve you best.

GOLD MINE LURE FOR 300 YEARS

Fabulous Treasure Said to Be Hidden in Sierra Madre Mountains in Mexico.

DYING PRIEST TELLS SECRET

Mexico City Contains Records of the Old Mine and Prospectors Have Reported Seeing the Ruins, but None Reached Them.

Bisbee, Ariz.—For 300 years, according to reliable records, the Sierra Madre mountains of Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico, have held the secret of a gold mine of fabulous richness and a vast treasure store of gold, mined and hidden away in an inaccessible tunnel.

The romance of the gold hunter is written in the history of man's efforts through the centuries to reach and bring back to civilization this wealth of the Old Tyopa mines. Murders and violence have marked many of these efforts, and still in many hardy breasts of this mining country today there still stirs the spirit which has prompted many to brave the dangers of starvation, thirst and death at the hands of Indian bands and outlaws in the search for gold.

Records at Capital.

Mexico City contains records of the old mine, and several prospectors, one of them Jack Dunn, accredited discoverer of the Warren district, have reported seeing the ruins of the old mine, but none ever reached there.

According to records at the Mexican capital, in the latter part of the Seventeenth century the isolated village of Old Tyopa was raided by Indians, who destroyed the town and killed all the inhabitants except a priest.

After wandering for several weeks the priest arrived at a little town called Agua Fria, on the Fuqui river, where he was received and cared for by a Mexican family. His hardships caused his death, but before he died he gave the family a description and map of the mining camp. He also reported that the gold obtained from several years of mining had been stored in an old tunnel, because of the impossibility of shipment to civilization.

The story and map, it is said, have been handed down from family to family for generations. Those who attempted to reach the camp lost their outfits, and many did not return. The Indians for years menaced all prospectors and this condition still exists, augmented by bands of outlaws.

Max Covita, for several years Mexican consul at Naco, is said to have been the latest possessor of the priest's map.

Has Twice Seen Ruins.

He declared he twice succeeded in getting as far as Casa Blanca, from which the ruins of Old Tyopa are visible, and it was reported he had not given up hopes of reaching the place at his death several years ago.

Bert Grover, a local man, twice started with two companions to make the perilous journey, but was forced back because of insufficient equipment, Indians and outlaws.

Some remarkable gold specimens have been brought back from the vicinity of the Old Tyopa, but so far as known no one ever reached the mines since the old town was destroyed centuries ago.

THIS STATE HIGHEST, LOWEST

Survey by Government Bureau Shows California Sets Marks for United States.

Washington.—The highest and lowest points in the United States are in California, within ninety miles of each other, says a bulletin issued by the geological survey. Mount Whitney, the highest point, is 14,501 feet above sea level and in Death valley there is a depression that lies 276 feet below sea level.

The difference in height of these two points is small, however, the survey states, as compared with the difference in the height and depth of land in Asia. Mount Everest rises 29,002 feet above sea level, whereas the shores of the Dead sea lie 1,290 feet below.

Information in the hands of the survey shows that the greatest depth yet found in any ocean is 32,088 feet, a depth at a point about 40 miles north of the island of Mindanao in the Philippines. This would make the bottom of the sea at that point more than 11½ miles below the summit of Mount Everest.

Masonic Emblems in Quilt.

Jeffersonville, Ind.—The Pastors' Aid Society of the First Presbyterian church is completing work on a quilt of unusual design. The quilt was designed by Dr. Giles E. Mowrer, formerly physician at the Indiana reformatory, and it will include the emblem of every branch of Masonry from the Blue lodge to the highest rank.

Many Children.

East St. Louis, Ill.—"He's the twentieth," declared Mrs. Sidney Johnson when her husband came home from work. "Again!" gasped the city's champion father, as he took the new baby in his arms. The Johnsons have been married twenty-three years.

NOTED JURIST COMING SOON

MARCUS A. KAVANAGH.

"JUDGE KAVANAGH seems to be one of the inspired truth tellers about the legal profession," states a Chicago Examiner editorial. The Chicago Tribune, commenting on this noted judge of the Superior Court of Cook county, says: "Judge Kavanagh's stinging accusation against the members of the judiciary, which he says is in a degree responsible for American lawlessness, ought to support the Civic Federation in its intention to correct the growing evils in political elections."

Collier's Weekly once remarked editorially regarding Judge Kavanagh: "His teaching is so simple that it may seem difficult to a calloused mind, but when a judge of the high court expounds this kind of doctrine it should at least have some moral weight."

The Chicago Record-Herald credits Judge Kavanagh, who is to be heard at the local Chautauqua, with "striking telling blows for the cause of sane procedure and real justice."

RICH IN RESOURCES

Colombia Has Much Natural Wealth, but Is Undeveloped

Lack of Transportation Facilities One of Its Biggest Drawbacks—Capital Is Hard to Reach.

Washington, D. C.—Colombia, the country to which the United States has just engaged by treaty to pay $25,000,000, and the scene of some of the principal exploits of Simon Bolivar, liberator of the northern states of South America, whose statue was recently unveiled in New York City, is the subject of the following bulletin issued from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society:

"Colombia, which occupies the northeastern corner of South America and forms the southern 'abutment' of the Isthmus of Panama, is typical of the entire northern and northeastern portion of the South American continent," says the bulletin. "It is tremendously rich in all sorts of natural resources and almost wholly undeveloped.

"It has an area of nearly half a million square miles, which means that it is almost twice the size of Texas; yet it has less than one-twentieth of the railroad mileage of that state.

"Bogota, the capital of Colombia, is situated between ranges of the Andes on a plateau at an elevation of more than a mile and a half. It is approximately 650 miles from the Caribbean sea along the most accessible route and 200 miles from the Pacific across the Andes. It has no rail connection with either sea. To reach it one must travel for more than 500 miles up the winding course of the Magdalena river by boat, skirting rapids by means of a short length of railroad, and finally cover the last 50 miles from the head of navigation by rail. The trip sometimes requires several weeks.

"More than half of the area of Colombia lies east of the three ranges of the Andes and consists of plains country sloping toward the center of the continent and drained by the headwaters of the great Amazon and Orinoco river systems. Covered with succulent grasses, these plains form an unsurpassed stock-raising country. It is largely unutilized and is to be compared with the plains of Rhodesia South Africa, as one of the richest unoccupied regions suitable for cattle raising remaining in the world. It is estimated that more than ten million head of cattle could be pastured on these 'llanos' of eastern Colombia.

"Colombia's climate conditions vary from the sub-tropical near the shores of the Caribbean, to Alpine in the higher Andes. Forests cover millions of acres, the deltas and river valleys yield cotton, tobacco, cacao, bananas rubber and other tropical and sub-tropical products, while on the hillsides coffee thrives. On the plateaus grain and other temperate zone products may be grown."

Columbia City, Ind.—Four horses in a barn at the farm of Frank Jones, five miles southwest of this city, were made deaf by a stroke of lightning the other day. A bolt struck the west side of the barn during a storm and ripped off the entire west side and part of the roof.

Seven hens were sitting on eggs. The eggs under five of the hens were broken to bits, but the hens were not hurt. Mr. Jones and his son left the building a few moments before it was struck. The barn did not take fire.

The Reorganised Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held their Sunday School picnic at Franklin Park on July 4th. Different games which occasioned much merriment to the assembled guests and made the event one long to be remembered were indulgd in. The honors of the horseshoe pitching contest went to the Dougherty brothers, 426 S. Eureka Ave. The baseball game between the Saints and the Athletic Club was won by the Saints in a score of 16 to 17 points. The fat women's race was so closely contested that no one claimed the "belt," but each one came off the field with an alibi—old man weather.

A basket dinner, with ice cream and refreshments served on the grounds were enjoyed by all.

We wish to thank friends and neighbors for kindness and floral offerings of sympathy; Rev. Cope and Hodgins for their kind words, the Schoedinger Co. for their service, the Masonic quartet and the West Gate Lodge for their part in the last rites of our son and brother, Lester Link, returned from overseas.

WM. LINK AND CHILDREN.

We wish to thank our many kind friends, relatives and neighbors for the kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our dear husband and father. We also express our appreciation for the many beautful floral offerings.

"THEY MADE THINGS"

The day after the Fourth of July a group of children could be seen winding their way toward the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church—for that is where it is held—intent on enrolling in the Daily Vacation Bible School where Miss Pauline T. Bryant awaited them as principal, Miss Alice Brookes at the piano, (O. S. U. '21) and Miss Elizabeth Brookes (O. S. U. student) for the young boys—and a graduate kindergartner, Miss Blodwen Davies in the kindergarten. They were ready for the crowd for they knew that when the boys and girls learned what the school was they would have a large turnout. Sure enough the program went as announced. They marched in to music at 9:15 sharp—sang a hymn, prayed the Lord's prayer, repeated a portion of Scripture and another hymn and then learned by memory a good old hymn and had some breathing exercises. Miss E. Brookes told them a habit talk—using a boy and a girl to demonstrate the value of good habits and the evil of bad ones. After that Miss Bryant told the children a Bible story, of how we got our Bible. Then followed the making of "things." The older boys began their bookracks and needles for making a really and truly hammock—the girls began a Food Scrap Book—they cut out their own pictures for it—the kindergartners strung corn and made daisies. The younger boys began their hand work using pictures from magazines. At 10:55 they gathered for a closing patriotic exercise by saluting the American flag and the Christian banner and singing the Star Spangled Banner and a Christian Hymn, repeated the children's benediction and marched out to martial music.

Announcement was made that on three afternoons they should go to Hillcrest Baptist Church for playground and on Friday the boys would be taken for a dip in the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool. O! Boy! And the best of the day was when the principal said: "Children, how many of you like the Daily Vacation Bible School?" and they all responded "I do."

The school will run for five weeks, every day except Saturday and Sunday and the enrollment fee is $2 for one child or one dollar for each other child. If any boy or girl cannot afford this fee it will be paid for them by others. There is still place for children. Parents send your children to this religious teaching-supervised play. No hard work, just fun all morning long and you will be surprised to learn that at end of the summer they will know about 30 songs by memory, about 30 Bible verses and will have heard 25 other Bible stories as well as "made some things."

Mr. W. L. Peck and family motored to Loraine on Saturday, July 2, returning July 5.

Batteries charged—6 volt 75 cts.; 12 volt $1.00. Rear 81 S. Oakley Av.

Eldon Thomas, eldest son of David Miles and Martha Sisson, was born July 19, 1880. Died in Mt. Carmel Hospital, Columbus, June 26, 1921, aged 40 years, 11 months and 7 days.

On April 22, 1905, he was united in marriage with Lillia Viola Mark. To them were born three children, Raymond Mark, Harlan Curtis and Carolyn Elizabeth. This home was bound together by the ties of love in a more than ordinarily strong union. Let us comfort ourselves with the thought that "Though he can not return to us, we can go to him."

In early manhood he was converted. He was ever an earnest worker.

After his marriage his work calling him from his boyhood home, he and his wife transferred their church membership to the Christian Church at Connersville, Indiana, where they made their home until less than two years ago when they came to Columbus, Ohio.

Besides the dear wife and children, he leaves father, mother, brother, sister, and friends unnumbered. In our grief let us not forget or neglect to thank our heavenly Father for granting to us the years of companionship with him whose life has been a blessing, and whose memory is in inspiration.

SOMEONE left an umbrella in the Record office a couple of weeks ago. If you gave it to us, thanks; if you just forgot it, come to this office, describe it and take it home

'LIGHT', 2,000 RUBLES

Demand for Courtesy Shocks Visitor in Petrograd.

Shows How Different Life Is in Russia From What It Is Anywhere Else —Pitiful Scenes in Streets.

Paris.—The scene of this incident is the Pigki in Petrograd, near the statue of Peter the Great. The time is the 10th of May, in the morning, and the actors are a young French journalist and one of Lenin's communists who are to regenerate the world by the abolition of private property.

The Frenchman has just arrived after many difficulties. He is anxious for a cigarette and finds that he has no matches. Then he sees a tall, thin Bolshevik supporting a wall while he smokes. The Frenchman politely approaches, raises his hat and asks for a light. The Bolshevik, with the utmost economy of effort, extends a lighted cigarette. The Frenchman is profuse in thanks.

"That will be 2,000 rubles," remarks the Bolshevik.

"After all, it was only forty centimes," says the journalist, Maxime Baze, in his dispatch to Excelsior, "but for the moment my breath was taken away by the demand and the amount of it. Two thousand rubles for the courtesy of handing a light. By that one can see as well as in any way how different life is in Russia from what it is anywhere else."

M. Baze tells the now familiar story of deserted, silent streets and of people emaciated and covered with sores who furtively slink along the streets. Most pitiful of all is, he says, to see women who have guarded from former days some piece of finery—a lace scarf of the Paris fashion of 1914, or a dress from which the color has long since faded. They seem to cling to these things as the last link with the days that were.

The only real manufacture that is done by the townspeople seems to be that of agricultural tools, which they make and privately barter with the peasants for small doles of flour or vegetables.

No one, says M. Baze, knows how anyone else manages to continue living as many factories which were at work last year and supplied their employes with food are now closed. Even the cooperatives are closing, for they have no more to sell and it is this fact more than anything else which has inclined Lenin to the re-establishment of private commerce.

MEET "SALLY SIMMONS"

A useful young lady is "Sally," the idol of all the fair sex; she's the pet of the ladies and loves the babies, she's never been known to be vexed.

The sign on Sally tells all about her:

You stir your porridge with my face,
And with my apron dust the place;
Wash up the dishes with my shawl,
'Tis strongly made, and not too small.
My skirt, you see, is not a hobble,
'Twill dry your glass without much trouble;
To clean your kettle you can sit
And calmly use my magic mitt.
But if you want a mop instead,
You'll find one on my wooden head.
Although my hair has turned quite white,
I'll work for you both day and night.

Dog Gets Hawk in Air.

Danville, Ind.—A hawk, which for months preyed on the poultry yards of Liberty township, made a mistake when it attempted to sortie on a flock guarded by Sherman Lookinbill's Airdale dog. When the hawk swooped down on the flock, the dog rushed forward, sprang into the air and seized the bird by one foot. Although the dog's head and ears were badly cut by the hawk's talons, the Airdale held on and killed the bird.

FORTUNE IN SHARKS

Extended Use Found for "Tigers of the Sea."

New Industry on the Pacific Coast Promises Big Profits for Its Promoters.

Victoria.—With the supply of raw material unlimited, an industry new to this country is flourishing at Parker island, between Galiano and Mayne island, on the Gulf of Georgia. It is the business of catching sharks, and a week's catch at the beginning of May run to 80, with an average weight of more than a ton each. Nelson MacDonald of this city, who operated the first shark-catching machinery on the island, declares there will never be a shortage, as there are millions in the waters surrounding the island.

"In fact, the farther north you go the more sharks you will find, and from here to Alaska are their feeding grounds," Mr. MacDonald said. "Taking them from the bottom of the sea is automatic. Norway has hundreds of such industries. The only real hook for catching them, which works on a swivel, comes from there and the so-called cod liver oil, which invades the markets of the world, is really shark liver oil, manufactured in Norway."

Nothing is wasted in a shark plant. There is no finer fish meat than that made from the bodies of sharks. As a fertilizer it is superior to dogfish. The head of the shark is full of glue of a highly valuable quality, and the fins are a much prized Chinese food delicacy, orientals here paying as much as $30 a pound for it.

The liver content runs from 60 to 70 per cent of finest oil, of which about 10 per cent is glycerin. Shark's teeth are in demand in many parts of the world, and fetch a high price for the manufacture of ornaments. What bones there are, and they are few, go into the fertilizer part of the industry.

The greatest interest in this new industry is being manifested in the manufacture of hides. Several American companies have been formed, and much research work is being done at present. The shark hides run from an inch in thickness to the consistency of paper in the baby shark. In Seattle they are manufacturing hip-boots from shark hides and they are declared to be completely waterproof.

NOSE MADE FROM RIB BONE

Miss Hanna Karpman suffered the loss of the bridge of her nose in an auto accident some years ago. Recently she underwent an operation in which a segment of one of her ribs was inserted in her nose. The photo shows the result.

Drove Weasel Out of Tree.

Hazleton, Pa.—As Calvin Waldron and friends were walking along the mountainside at Conyngham they spied a full-grown weasel up a tree. While two of them threw stones at the animal Waldron stood guard at the bottom, and when the weasel came down he captured it alive.

16 Hens Batted .300 in Egg Layers' League

Berkeley, Cal.—Sixteen hens in the United States, all of them white, have laid over 300 eggs in a year, thus entering the select class in the egg-laying league, according to H. M. Butterfield, poultry statistician of the college of agriculture.

Oregon has three top-notchers, one laying 330 eggs in 365 days, and two others showing 323 eggs, he says. Across the continent at Storrs, Conn., a White Wyandotte laid 308 eggs, while a White Plymouth Rock and a White Leghorn were good for over 300 eggs at Vineland, N. J.

ENGINEERING NO LURE FOR YOUTH

Where Are Our Mechanics to Come From? Asks the American Society.

FOR CONTINUING SCHOOLS

Proper Educational Facilities Denied to 38,000,000 Persons, One Man Says —Half the Children Leave School Without Real Education.

Chicago.—Which is to blame—the boy or the job? The boy of a few years back always went through the engineering stage of his ambitions. That was just before the military career hit him, and years before he yearned for the life of the big game hunter.

The boy of 1921 seems to have strayed off the track. He displays so little enthusiasm in the life of the engineer that it's becoming a momentous problem. Members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers are worried over the question, Where are our mechanics to come from?

Apprenticeship no longer appeals to the youth of today. Trade schools are all right, but there are not enough of them.

The solution appears to the society to be a happy medium between the school and the shop—some of each, not all out of books, nor all hard, physical work. When a middle course is perfected the engineers believe that the boys' interest in the science will revive.

Seventy per cent of the youth of the United States lack the natural ability to go through high school, according to H. E. Miles of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Mr. Miles made the statement in a plea for better co-operation of the industries and the schools. He said that of the 30 per cent that are able to graduate from high school less than half have ability enough to go through college.

No Real Education.

"Half of the children of the country leave school forever without any real education," he declared. "We should make equal provision for those who cannot go to college by setting up for wage earners and others in connection with their employment or otherwise the equivalent of high school and college education adapted to their circumstances.

"An authoritative investigation of 5,045 high schools indicates that only 2,000 of those investigated profess to teach civics, and only 136, less than 3 per cent of the total, use accredited texts, and these are used in the third year of high school, therefore available mostly to students destined for college. In the remainder of the high schools, social studies mean talks on current events with indifferent material as a basis."

Mr. Miles, who has been conducting a survey of the nation's educational resources and needs, said that proper opportunity for education has been deprived 38,000,000 persons, and that the national intelligence of the nation stands indicted for that reason. He praised the former German empire for its educational system, and declared that, despite its apparent disregard for society as a whole, it has shown the way toward real education.

Compulsory Schools.

"By a survey of 105 of Germany's leading industries, 65 per cent of the men in foremost places in managerial and technical departments were little working boys who quit school at fourteen," added Mr. Miller. "They grew up with the right sort of compulsory continuation schools and later selectively had special technical training with the assistance of their employers and otherwise. Most of the graduates of Germany's technical colleges served under the leaders from work schools and higher vocational institutions of which there are practically none in democratic America."

Future leaders of American industry will be recruited from colleges and workshops linked together by a cooperative educational system, according to Prof. Dugald C. Jackson of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who supported the theory of Mr. Miles.

ITALIAN VETS OUST GIRLS

Swarm by Thousands into Offices of Government Ministers and Seize Their Positions.

Rome.—Italian soldiers who were more or less mutilated during the war lately have swarmed by the thousands into many of the government ministries, taking possession by force of the places of the many young women who gained a footing there during the war.

Newspapers are being flooded with letters, telling lurid tales of the frivolity of these daughters of Eve; of the little work they do and the great amount of time they waste on flirtations and on their toilettes, and of many families whose peace is said to have been undermined by their dangerous proximity to staid and respectable men.

At any rate it appears that soldiers who have served their country have made good their claim to the coveted positions and both in Rome and in many provincial towns the edict has gone forth that the girls must go.

Cat Catches Two Trout.

Hollis, N. H.—It takes a cat to put to blush some of the fastidious Isaak Waltons. A feline belonging to A. B. Eaton recently brought in two live trout, each measuring six inches. Where the cat got the trout Eaton does not know. She keeps her own secret.

Surgeon's Teeth Pulled, He Regains His Sanity

Duquoin, Ill.—Southern Illinois physicians marvel at the recovery of Doctor Barts, prominent surgeon of Campbell Hill, who has just been released from the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane at Anna. Doctor Barts became violently delirious several days ago and was ordered to the asylum. Physicians there discovered that defective teeth were the cause of his condition and after these were extracted Doctor Barts, in two days' time, became perfectly normal and has been permitted to return to his home.

BE CALM AND KEEP WELL, IS JONES' ADVICE

HILTON I. JONES.

If you value your teeth, do not get mad.

This is the advice of Dr. Hilton I Jones, who is to be heard at Chautauqua in his unusual lecture on "The Fountains of Psyche." In this talk on mental control Dr. Jones asserts that getting mad is one of the most injurious experiences imaginable, not only for the teeth, but also for the stomach and other organs.

The bite of any human being—black, white or red—who is mad enough to use his teeth, is a very dangerous one. He explains this by saying that the sublingual glands beneath the tongue are simply altered venom sacs which in times of anger revert to their primitive function. And so it is all over the body.

Going further into the matter of mental suggestion, Dr. Jones tells an interesting story of his father, "Hay" Jones, and a man known as "Hog" Lewis. His father's name was gained through the fact that he traveled over the state of Minnesota advocating the planting of tame grasses. With his father there traveled a man named Lewis, who was a specialist in Poland China hogs. He had raised hogs for 40 years and looked like one. He thought of nothing but hogs. His dream, his ideal, his ambition, was hogs, and he became like the thought that was in him. "And so it is," maintains Doctor Jones, "that our brilliancy, our health and even our very looks are largely the result of our thinking."

We go to Chautauqua because we can always depend on hearing and seeing good, clean and uplifting entertainment.—A. G. Flickinger, Bucyrus, O.

PURSUES WOLF WITH AUTO

South Dakota Man Lands Nine Cubs for Which He Receives Bounty of $3 Each.

Aberdeen, S. D.—George Berg delivered at the office of the Brown county auditor the other day the hides of nine baby wolves, upon which he will receive county bounty in the sum of $1 per scalp and $2 per scalp in state bounties.

Berg lives near Verdon and a few days ago he discovered an old she-wolf in his chicken yard. The animal started away at his approach and Berg got into his automobile and followed her.

Across the prairie the wolf took her course with the car in pursuit. The animal finally arrived at her den and disappeared. Berg reached the spot a few minutes later and with a spade excavated to the home of the wolf, where he found her nine babies. He drove the old wolf out and captured the cubs, whose hides he has sold to the county.

Umbrella Blown to Him.

Fulton, Mo.—Starting home about one o'clock one morning, the fact that the rain was beating down in a strong wind made John Emerson wish for an umbrella, raincoat and everything. No sooner wished than an umbrella blew right into his hands. It is an ill wind that blows no good, so after looking around for the owner and failing to find him, John walked on home under the aforesaid umbrella. But he is in a quandary. He would like to know, just for curiosity's sake, to whom the umbrella belongs and where it came from.

Cat Adopted Valuable Black Foxes Left Orphans

A house cat has saved $2,500 for L. W. Archibald, superintendent of the Warren Black Fox ranch, of Warren, Pa., by adopting five orphaned foxes. The mother fox died soon after giving birth to the five cubs, and the cubs, worth $500 each, seemed doomed. But the Archibald cat had just become a mother, so the superintendent removed the kittens and substituted the foxes. The mother cat took kindly to the arrangement and has adopted the cubs as her own.

REAL BLACKBERRY EXPERIENCE

Mr. C. E. Davis and Mr. C. E. Helmbrecht of the Carlile & Kerr Co., H. T. Store, went blackberrying and after driving all night, finally landed at the patch in their air cooled Fords. Some Fords use gasoline and some don't. However, Mr. Helmbrecht bought gas at Brownsville at 24c per, but Davis said nothing doing; I won't pay 2c more on the gallon. Well, the result is Davis getting under Helmbrecht's machine, getting gas to get to the next town which is eleven miles in the distance. Ask him about it.

VICTOR HUGO AND AVIATION

Noted Frenchman Believed, Many Years Ago, in Man's Coming Navigation of the Air.

Victor Hugo was a lover of the spherical balloon and took great interest in all aeronautical experiments. A letter from the great French poet addressed to Gaston Tisandier in 1869 is reproduced in La Conquete de l'Air, of which the following is a translation, says the Detroit News.

"I believe, monsieur, in all progress. Navigation of the air follows naturally the navigation of the ocean; from the water man should pass to the air. Wherever in creation there is anything to be desired man penetrates in search of it. Our only limit is life itself. Where ceases the column of air, where the pressure prevents his machine from flying there alone man will be stopped. But he can, he should and he will go that far.

"You can do it. I take the greatest interest in your useful and brilliant voyages. I, also, have the taste for scientific adventure. Certainly the future will see aerial navigation and the duty of the present is to work for the future. This duty you are performing.

"I alone, but attentive, I am eyes for you and I cry, courage!"

Isinglass From Fish Bladders.

Isinglass is made from the air bladders of certain species of fish. The best quality comes from the Russian sturgeon, but the substance is yielded also by the cod, hake and other fish. In the preparation of isinglass the air bladder is torn from the fish and washed in cold water. Then the black outer skin is removed; the rest is washed and spread on a board to dry, the shiny, inner membrane being turned outward. Best results are obtained when the drying takes place in the sun.

When dry, the bladder is moistened in warm water, and the inner skin removed by rubbing and beating. It is then passed between iron rollers, which reduce it to a thin, partly transparent ribbon having somewhat the appearance of watered silk. The sheets used in the panels of stove doors, and incorrectly known as isinglass, are made from mica, a mineral.

The Chautauqua

Saturday is to be the opening day of the Hilltop's second annual seven days' Redpath Chantauqua, and a glance at the list of high grade attractions is assurance that this year's program will be even superior to the one enjoyed last year. The big tent will arrive this afternoon and will be erected Friday on the Hilltop Chautauqua grounds so that all will be in readiness for the opening of the week's entertainment at three o'clock Saturday afternoon by the Euterpean Artists with a lively program of readings and vocal and instrumental music. Saturday evening at eight o'clock following a prelude by the Euterpean Artists, Edwin M. Whitney will read the newly released American comedy, "In Walked Jimmy."

Superintendent F. M. Whitney, who had charge of the program last year, will serve in that capacity again this season.

On Wednesday afternoon, following the regular program, which will begin half an hour early, will be one of the big events of the week in the form of a program put on by Hilltop people. The personnel of the feature attraction is being kept as a big surprise for that afternoon, but advance information indicates that anyone missing this special program will miss one of the biggest events of the entire week. All stores on the Hilltop will close Wednesday afternoon.

Among the other attractions announced for the week are the Broadway comedy success, "Nothing But the Truth"; Laurant and Company, magicians; Harold Procter, California tenor; the light opera, "Pinafore"; Judge Marcus A. Kavanaugh of the Superior Court of Chicago; Irene Stolofsky, violinist and a Columbia artist; Edward Amherst Ott, in his "Victory" lecture of present day problems, and Paul W. Ward, who has just returned from Warsaw, Russia, and other European Countries in his lecture, "After Armageddon," on present day European conditions.

There will be no charge for the afternoon and evening entertainments, on Sunday churches will do away with the evening service in order that a united Hilltop community service can be held at the tent. A collection will be taken to cover expenses.

O. L. Dolby, President of the Hilltop Chautauqua Association, and W. L. Roller, Secretary are in charge of local arrangements. Mark Seilers, Chairman of the season ticket campaign, reports that the tickets are moving rapidly so that everything points to a thoroughly enjoyable week for Chautauqua patrons on the Hilltop, July 16th to 22nd.

Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Ulrey, together with Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Snyder, expect to leave on Saturday for Flack's Camp, Snow Island, Mich., in the of St. Clair, where they will spend a two weeks' vacation.

Mr. P. B. McCloud, 93 North Eureka avenue, picked four ripe peaches off a tree in his yard, which had a combined weight of one pound and nine ounces. One peach weighed nine ounces and was nine and three-quarters inches in circumference. Isn't that "a peach"?

WORK FOR CIVIL ENGINEERS

Unsolved Problems of Metallurgy That Are Engaging the Attention of Steel Manufacturers.

Very fascinating are the unsolved problems of metallurgy which were discussed at a recent meeting of an institution of civil engineers.

There is a common carbon steel which, when heated to 725 degrees Centigrade and quenched in brine, bends on becoming cold. 43 degrees, and possesses the hardness number 228 on the Brinnel scale. If heated only 10 degrees higher, to 735 degrees, and then quenched and cooled, it bends only 1½ degrees, and its hardness becomes 512. Finally, when the heat is increased another five degrees, to 740 degrees, the effect is that the steel will not bend at all, and its hardness number rises to 713.

All these results are produced by a range of temperature less than that experienced by the air on an ordinary spring day. There is a steel containing 20 per cent of nickel which is almost nonmagnetic and has a tenacity of 40 tons per square inch. If immersed in liquid air it becomes strongly magnetic, and its tenacity rises to 15 tons. Then, after returning to ordinary temperatures it retains a tenacity of 115 tons.—Christian Science Monitor.

Henry's Young Grandmother

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Alice Trover's heart was heavy as she turned from the window where, shielded by a curtain, she had watched Henry Gordon disappear round a corner of the street.

She dropped into a chair and picked up a magazine. The cover represented and insipid young woman carrying a parasol and a dog, looking in rapture over a fence at a stack of hay. The cover oppressed Alice, so she turned to the back and absently began reading an advertisement in colors.

"Discovered! The Elixir of Youth!" ran the headline of the advertisement in bright red letters. And a subtitle below it was:

"Why Have Wrinkles? Use Sylvia Hall's Carmine Cold Cream and Banish Signs of Age and Worry."

Then there were two pictures, one of a woman who might be about eighty-five years old, and the other of a girl of perhaps sixteen. On perusing further, Alice discovered that the two persons were one and the same, the first being "before" and the other "after" using the wonderful "Carmine Cold Cream."

Alice discarded the magazine and smiled bitterly.

"Perhaps I had better invest in some of that," she mused. "Not that I'm so old, but I'd like to banish worry. I must be getting a liberal supply of wrinkles, and I'll be looking like a hundred years old if this ordeal doesn't end pretty soon. Why can't I muster enough courage to do my duty to Henry and myself?"

The "ordeal" in question began two weeks ago, when Alice first saw Henry with another woman. They had been in a restaurant dining, and Alice had happened along and had seen them through a window. The view was from a distance, but it had been sufficient to convince Alice that her rival was young and good looking.

She waited for Henry to speak of the matter, but he did not mention it. Inasmuch as he had been engaged to Alice for a year, it would have been the proper thing for him to explain himself, she thought.

Alice was willing to let it drop, only the very next day Jennie Quaites, who worked with her in the shoe manufacturer's office, came to her with a story of having seen Henry with "a very stylishly dressed young woman" at a matinee. Soon after other friends were kind enough to inform her of episodes of a similar nature, and finally Alice again saw the pair herself at the same restaurant, through the same window.

Then she decided she must act. She could no longer keep Henry's ring. He had fallen in love with another girl, and his own sense of duty was preventing him from stepping out of Alice's life. That was the way Alice figured it.

Three times after Alice had made that decision Henry called on her, and three times she had tried to act as she had planned. But she cared so much for him, and he treated her so much as he always had that she could not bring herself to the climax of their romance that she had determined upon.

Finally, in desperation, Alice sought the advice of her aunt, who was worldly wise and versed in matters of the heart, having had three husbands and survived them all. She found her aunt performing her toilet and making profuse use of some crimson, paste-like substance which she took from a large jar.

"Making myself young again," explained the aunt, rubbing the oily substance into her face. "This is Sylvia Hall's Carmine Cream, which restores youth, banishes old age and wrinkles. You won't know me when I get made up. I think I'll try my hand at matrimony again when I have camouflaged the traces of Father Time's scythe."

She refused to become serious when Alice related her tale of woe.

"There's only one of two things to do," advised the aunt. "Hand him his ring and forget about him (what's one man more or less? There's plenty of them.) Or get busy and beat out this other woman that has stolen his affections. This may sound terribly slangy, but that's the result of the youth restorer getting in its work."

"But I love him too much to let him go, even though it's my duty," protested Alice, "and I can't bring myself to entering in a contest for his affections, especially when I've had them all to myself for so long."

"Better think it over, then," said the aunt. "You have my advice, and it's the best I can give. Better let him take the initiative, if you can't do it yourself."

"I must, though. It's my plain duty to break off our engagement and let Henry and this other woman enjoy happiness. I'll do it next time I see him, in spite of the inclination of my heart."

And Alice took her leave, while her aunt muttered something about "heart, affections—rot!" and resumed lathering her face.

While Alice was passing the window, however, the aunt appeared to have been struck with an idea, for she called:

"Alice, I just happend to think of something. Perhaps this other woman is Henry's sister, or cousin, or—or his mother. You never can tell these days, you know. Wait till you see me after this restorer gets in its fine work."

"No, it can't be," Alice rejoined. "Henry has no sisters or cousins. I know that to be a fact! and his mother is dead."

"Too bad, then. I thought perhaps I'd solved the puzzle. Well, good-by; and don't lose any sleep and get a lot of worry wrinkles."

At the dinner hour the next day Alice could not keep away from the restaurant where her troubles of the heart had begun. She had no intention of spying, but she simply must know if "that affair" was continuing.

Evidently it was, for through the window Alice saw Henry and the fashionably garbed woman she had almost learned to hate. Apparently they had dined earlier than usual, for Henry was paying the cashier and the lady was waiting for him. She carried a pink parasol, and all she needed, Alice thought, to duplicate the insipid picture on the front of a magazine was to have a dog nestled under her arm and a stack of hay at which to gaze in rapture.

"She's a silly looking young thing," the watcher remarked, and started away, determined not to be seen.

But she was seen. Henry spied her as he turned from the cashier's desk. Immediately he waved to her, and linking his arm through that of the other woman he strode to the door.

"Good evening, Alice," he said, doffing his hat and drawing the other woman toward his fiancee.

"Good evening," Alice responded coldly.

"I'd like you to meet a very celebrated lady," Henry went on. "You've read lots about her, no doubt, for her name is in all the magazines. Women are blessing her in every part of the globe for the good service she is performing for hem. Alice, this is Sylvia Hall, the inventor and manufacturer of the famous 'Carmine Cream,' that has banished age for so many, including herself. She's a living advertisement of her wares, as you can see for yourself. And," he finished proudly, "she's my only living relative. Alice, my fiancee—my grandmother."

Little Story That's True

MISPLACED PITY.

One day last week the writer, while riding a North and South High Street car toward Olentangy Park observed an incident which is no doubt repeated daily many times, but the incident brings to attention a truth that we are prone to overlook. At some point in the downtown section there boarded the car a family consisting of father and mother and seven children, ranging from a babe in arms to a lad of fourteen years of age. All were comfortably well, however, very cheaply dressed. By their dress and manner it was very evident that they were not natives in the city. The children, by their open and frank expressions of wonder and surprise at the various sights and scenes of the city, marked themselves as "right from the farm." They formed a more or less conspicuous group without consciously doing so. Their appearance, obviously was responsible for the greater part of the attention shown them, and if the writer is any judge of facial expression the predominent sentiment of those other passengers was one of pity. But there were not a few whose faces showed an expression, if not of contempt, then of disgust. The family must have been on the way to Olentangy Park for a day's outing and joy was written on their faces. But in looking into the faces of most of those around me, I could almost hear them propound these questions and give voice to these thoughts. What will become of these children under present conditions? What of their education? What right have parents to bring into this world so large a family? Those poor children, what pleasure can life hold for them? That hardworked mother, life must be a burden to her. And I confess that I, too, was about to become a victim of that false philosophy. I almost missed the inspiration of it all when I looked into the deep eyes of the eldest boy and read there the answer to it all. Here were seven jewels "in the rough." These parents were wealthy in treasure that is God's very own. Just a look in that mother's face as it glowed in enthusiasm almost as great as that upon the faces of the children, would convince all that she was not an object for pity. In fact the most casual observer could there distinguish the greatest cardinal virtues. Love, devotion, meekness and trust were seen in every line of her face. What wealth can excell these attributes that kings and potentates have yearned to possess. The simplicity and child-like appreciation of small things shown by this family are possessions that are invaluable and are entirely lost to those who are more worldly wise and sophisticated. Who is to say that they are poor while others are rich? Whittier says:

Let vapid idlers loll in silk
About their costly board
Give me the bowl of samp and milk
By home-spun beauty poured."

THIRD TOUR FOR WHITNEY

Star Monologist to Give "In Walked Jimmie" at Local Chautauqua.

EDWIN M. WHITNEY.

THOSE who have heard Mr. Whitney in "The Fortune Hunter" or "Turn to the Right" will be the best advertisement for this phenomenal monologist when he appears on the opening night of the Redpath Chautauqua. It has been said that "excellence needs little else than itself to commend its virtues." This is true with Mr. Whitney and his art. His reputation as a reader of modern plays is such that the simple mention of his name brings an audience of large proportions.

This season, for the third time, Mr. Whitney is touring the Redpath seven-day Chautauqua circuit in this territory, giving "In Walked Jimmie," and if previous experience is a criterion, it is a safe prediction that he will not be exceeded in popularity by any number during the entire week.

Our Vocabulary Lacks Democracy

EDWARD AMHERST OTT.

THAT DOCTOR OTT, the headline speaker announced for Chautauqua's second day, is humorous as well as earnest and dramatic, is indicated by what he has to say regarding the conspicuous lack of democracy in our American vocabulary. To illustrate, he calls attention to "Royal" baking powder and "Red Crown" gasoline. "Why 'Royal?'" he inquires. "Why not 'Senatorial?' Would our housewives be afraid it would take too long to act?" The name "Red Crown" appeals to Doctor Ott as indicative of the "red" influence of which we hear so much nowadays. He suggests that the name of the gasoline should be changed to "Congressional," adding that almost any Congress is willing to stand for a bit of free publicity.

LLOYD PRAISED BY GUNSAULUS

Chautauqua Speaker Brings "Message of Good Cheer and Sane Thought."

DR. STEPHEN A. LLOYD.

THE late Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus who at one time was on the same Chautauqua program with Dr Stephen A. Lloyd, who is to beard during the local assembly, once remarked that Dr. Lloyd had "the most worth-while message of the entire week." Another comment is to the effect that "Dr. Lloyd's humorous and dramatic way of imparting the truth is as enjoyable as it is profitable."

From Cooperstown, New York, the one-time home of James Fenimore Cooper, came the report a year or two ago that the "closing days of Chautauqua week brought events which well sustained Chautauqua's high standard. In fact, with such lectures as that of Dr. Gunsaulus and Dr. Lloyd, the foregoing statement is entirely too mild. Dr. Lloyd brought one of the most interesting and instructive lectures of the week."

From Batavia, New York, where Dr. Lloyd has spoken more than 20 times in the last six years, comes the report that "he has a genius for the work he is doing, and brings a message of good cheer and sane thought. He mixes his philosophy of life with a lively wit and humor which makes it palatable to the popular taste. He never talks above the heads of his audience."

In the convention that framed the national constitution very slow progress towards anything definite was made for some time. There were such diversities of opinion that it seemed, after being several days in session, the convention must, of necessity, dissolve without accomplishing anything. Some proposed a final adjournment, and a part of the New York delegation, disgusted, withdrew and went home. At this momentous crisis Dr. Franklin arose and said to the president: "How has it happened, sir, that while groping so long in the dark, divided in our opinions, and now ready to separate without accomplishing the great object of our meeting, we have hitherto not once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Lights to illumine our understandings? In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and graciously answered." After a few more remarks, he moved that "henceforth prayers, imploring the assistance of heaven and its blessings on our deliberations, be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business.' Objections were also made because there were no funds to defray the expenses of such clerical services. The motion was not adopted.

DIPLOMATS IN GAUDY DRESS

Uniforms Worn Long Ago by American Representatives Abroad Had No Note of Simplicity.

With the early life of the Republic we are inclined to associate the idea of Jeffersonian simplicity in all forms, yet in 1817 the accepted uniform of the American diplomatic service was as follows, according to the Literary Digest: Blue coat lined with white silk; straight standing cape embroidered with gold, single-breasted, straight or round buttonholes, slightly embroidered; buttons plain, or if they can be had, with white silk; straight standing upon them, i. e., an eagle flying with a wreath in its mouth, grasping lightning in its talons; cuffs embroidered in the manner of the cape; white cashmere breeches; gold knee-buckles; white silk stockings and gold or gilt shoe-buckles. A three-cornered cheapeau bras, not so large as those worn by the French nor so small as those worn by the English. A black cockade to which, lately, an eagle has been attached. Sword, etc., corresponding.

Then Andrew Jackson became President, and the uniform was modified for economy and to be better "adapted to the simplicity of our institutions," and finally, in 1853, there went forth the recommendation to ministers to confine themselves to the "simple dress of an American citizen," a recommendation which, we are told, produced "a terrible uproar in Europe."

When Doctors Disagree.

"What did the doctors decide upon at the consultation?"

"The surgeon advised an operation."

"Did they all agree with him?"

"No. The osteopath insisted upon osteopath treatments; the electrical man thought electricity necessary; the throat specialist recommended his treatment, so we decided to stick to the family doctor since we couldn't give them all a chance."

Poor.

"Here's a pass for two. Take your girl to the theater tonight."

"Sorry, mister, but I can't accept your generosity."

"Why not?"

"I can't afford the price of the meal she'd expect after the show."—Detroit Free Press.

GLIMPSE OF "DICK'S" STAR

Senile Grippie Overlook Trolley Car and Would Have Defeated Police Flivver if the Street Crowds Had Not Hampered Him.

Chicago.—John Shebec, who is 67 years old, discovered the elixir of youth the other day. Before taking he was stooped, lame, decrepit, hopelessly senile. After one dose he was able to hop a speeding street car, outrace a flivver, and stand on his ear.

Mr. Shebec was first observed by Detective Sergeants Bierndt and Janaczak at Western avenue and Madison street. He was limping.

"Give me a quarter for carfare, please," he asked them. Bierndt started to explain that transportation in this City of the Horn may be purchased, theoretically, at a nickel a ride—and, if one is traveling in the suburbs outside the precincts of the city hall, at 8 cents. He meant to follow up this information with a remark that the old man's two-bit demand was a bit exorbitant. He was interrupted, however, by a citizen who burst from the corner saloon.

He Sees a Star.

"You old rascal, I just gave you carfare," shouted the man.

"Aha," quoth Bierndt, "come with me."

He exhibited his star. One casual glance at the glittering elixir worked a marvelous transformation. It penetrated the ancient's system instanter and invested his feet with a zest for voyage.

The next instant Shebec was ten yards away. The instant after that he was scarcely discernible for dust.

"Holy haste!" exclaimed Bierndt. "That guy's exceeding the speed limit. What he needs is a pair of brakes."

The detectives jumped into their flivver and tore after the vanishing Shebec. About a block ahead was a street car, traveling at the rate of numerous miles per hour. It saw the ancient chasing it and tried to get away.

"Too Durned Slow."

No use! With an easy leap Shebec had achieved the step. Then he looked behind him and saw that the police flivver was making better time than the street car.

"You're too durned slow," said he to the conductor—and off he jumped. The particular section of the metropolis into which the ancient leaped was a bit populated. The abundant citizenry impeded his progress and made straight running impossible. In the zigzaggins which ensued the flivver had time to catch up and Shebec was apprehended. In his pockets were found twenty $1 bills and about $5 in coins.

"I think I'll enter that bird in the Indianapolis sweepstakes next year," said Bierndt at the station. "He runs without gas and never has tire trouble. He's the fastest thing I ever saw in pants."

"DEAD" MAN RETURNS HOME

Supposed Victim of Railway Accident Gives His Relatives a Very Happy Surprise.

Youngstown, O. — Sadness was turned into rejoicing when W. J. Mills, who was identified as having been killed by a train near Williamson, W. Va., last April, walked into the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ida Malone, Parkersburg, W. Va., and gave her and his two sons a surprise that they will long remember.

Instead of grieving over the passing of their father, whom they believed was killed, they are happily explaining how they were mistaken when they identified another for him in a morgue in Williamson.

Mills explained that he had been visiting friends in Youngstown, and that he was so deeply impressed with the steel city, its environment and suburbs that he forgot to write.

The family is trying to decide what disposition to make of the body of the man who was buried in the family plot near Parkersburg.

98c to $1.89 Fancy Voiles, 69c—Seiller's.

The Chautauqua

The Hilltop Redpath Chautauqua which opened up last Saturday started off with a large attendance and has kept it up ever since. The numbers this year have been exceptionally good and are praised highly by those who attended, who have pronounced the time and money spent by them as very profitable.

Besides the numbers of Thursday afternoon and evening there will be those of Friday afternoon and evening. Friday evening the popular California tenor, Harold Proctor, Irene Stolofsky, Polish violinist and William Janaushek, pianist, will be the attraction and will be well worth your while to hear.

The local committee who have labored hard for this Hilltop event, deserve the praise and thanks of our people for their efforts. It has taken time and labor on their part and only by self-sacrifice could such an effort succeed.

William, the little son on Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 171 Midland avenue, was suddenly attacked with acute indigestion last Wednesday, and but for the timely arrival of the doctor the attack would have proven fatal. At late report he is geeting along all right.

Let's go to the lawn fete, Broad and Richardson, Saturday evening July 30th.

Bathing Suits at Seiller's.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Edwards mother and sister have returned from Indian Lake from a vacation.

Baptists Elect Woman Leader.

Des Moines, Ia.—With the election of Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery of Rochester, N. Y., as president of the Northern Baptist convention, a precedent was set among the larger denominations of the United States. Coincidentally, the convention was presided over by a woman, Mrs. M. Grant Edmands of Pasadena, Cal., after E. L. Tustin of Philadelphia, the president, had been stricken with illness.

Heavenly Dust Cloud of Vast Bulk Is Found

London.—Dr. A. Pannekeck, a Dutch scientist, has been demonstrating the existence of an inconceivably vast object in the heavens. Its mass, he says, is 20,000,000,000 times greater than that of the sun. He calls it a celestial gas or dust cloud. Doctor Pannekeck says this huge body is situated in the constellation of Taurus and his estimate of its size is greater than many estimates of the combined mass of the whole universe itself.

PAN GOLD IN LOS ANGELES

Workers Find Pay Gravel Not So Very Many Miles From the Center of the City.

Los Angeles.—Gold is being panned daily but a few miles from the center of the city of Los Angeles and near the heart of the north residential district.

Guy W. Rollins, chief engineer for a rock and gravel company, which operates in the Arroyo Seco, has installed a system of crude sluice boxes and each day "pans" out a quantity of the precious metal that nets him $20 weekly.

The gold dust is found in the gravel that is dug from the bed of the Arroyo Seco and for years has been left with the crushed gravel to be used in road construction. Rollins discovered the "pay streak" when he entered the company's employ several months ago and has been panning it since then.

Many folks can keep a secret for a few hours or days but there are two young Hilltoppers who can keep a secret for five months and might have kept it longer had it not been for some little mouse who found their secret out, not exactly correct, but who found out just enough to make it known to all their friends. Any one desiring to keep a similar secret might make a special call at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Lewis Van Houten and get full particulars free of charge.

BAN PUT ON "DOLLS"

Chicago Business Men Revolt Against Gay Clothing.

Department Store and Railway Office Lead the Way and Others Follow.

Chicago.—"The dolls must go."

This is the feeling in business circles and marks a revolt against the extreme dressing and artificial make-up of many office and sales girls.

One big department store has banned all dresses except black, gray and brown. No knee lengths. The girls in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy offices read a notice putting the kibosh on transparent waists, stockings and paint. Even gum has been banished.

"More and more employers are specifying how a girl shall dress," said L. R. Troll, manager of the American Railway bureau, which furnishes office help to employers. "A great many are reticent when it comes to stating just how a girl should dress, as they consider it none of their business, so when they call me over the telephone they simply specify 'quietly dressed' young women. When I talk to them in their private offices they tell me how undesirable the flashily dressed girl is.

"They notice a lot of things, too. There is a special objection right now to the light gray silk hose which the girls are wearing."

Miss Josephine Bessems, manager of the Women's Occupational bureau, gave instances of many girls who had failed to get positions because of their flashy clothes.

"For a railroad office where the girls do not meet the public a gingham dress is best," she declared.

David Halliman, manager of the La Salle Employment bureau, has discovered that the girls wear modest dresses when they come into his office looking for a job and then as soon as they are hired they put on flashy attire.

"There are some slaves to style who never will give up their extreme dress, though," he ventured.

VIENNA IS AGAIN CITY OF GAYETY

People Are Fashionably Dressed and Spend Money Freely in Luxury Shops.

GOOD FOOD IS NOW PLENTIFUL

White Bread and Fancy Dainties Seen Everywhere, but the Finances of the State Are in a Chaotic Condition.

Vienna. — Finance and economics seem to have parted company in Austria.

With its money situation chaotic, there is at the same time a generally acknowledged betterment of conditions of living.

Travelers revisiting Vienna say they do not recognize the city of a year ago. The mass of the people are better dressed, and more plentiful food is shown in their healthy appearance. The green and sallow faces have disappeared, and on the whole the Viennese are nearly back to normal as far as external evidence goes.

Paris can hardly show a more fashionably gowned crowd of women than that which turns out for the ring promenade in the afternoon or throngs the high-class shopping district in the mornings.

Shops Display Luxuries.

The shop display of luxurious wares of every description increases until the Arbeiter Zeitung says it exceeds Vienna's best days of before the war. The same newspaper admits there is steady progress and betterment in business and general conditions.

The famous delicatessen shops are reopening with almost their old-time excellence. The windows are filled with fancy dainties for which the city was noted, canned stuffs of the finest foreign makes are to be bought, American crackers and biscuits are common in the grocery stores, the candy shops are restocked, and while last winter a pound of sweets was virtually unprocurable the finest fresh bonbons now are to be had in any quantity.

White bread is served in nearly every restaurant, and the bakery windows again display the famous Vienna pastries and cakes. In the poorer districts even the butcher shops and grocery stores reflect the same condition.

Turning to finances, the current statement of the Austro-Hungarian bank speaks for it. There are at the moment 45,000,000,000 crowns in circulation and 4,000,000,000 outstanding treasury notes issued to the banks for discount. But this cheap money is plentiful.

Everyone Is Spending.

Everyone seems to have it and to be spending it. Enormously advanced prices for everything seem not to have affected the volume of business.

Printing presses are now turning out about 5,000,000,000 crowns a month to meet the government expenses. The current budget shows a deficit of 50,000,000,000 crowns. The wealth levy has produced thus far about 9,000,000,000 crowns, half of which was paid in war bonds, leaving enough cash from this source to meet about one month's running expenses for the government.

Through its spokesmen and newspapers the government is urging the need of haste in the proposed credit plan of the League of Nations by which enough foreign capital is sought to establish a bank of issue whose new currency on a gold basis is expected gradually to stabilize the value of the present crown.

WOOL INSTEAD OF FEATHERS

Freak Duck Born on Long Island May Be Progenitor of New Breed.

Eastport, L. I.—"Fuzzy," the featherless duck, a white Pekin freak, bred by George Frey of the Sunnyside duck farm, is creating great excitement among breeders, who see a way to make a fortune if "Fuzzy's" tribe can be increased.

It costs 6 cents to pluck a duck. When a man has 20,000 ducks to prepare for market plucking runs into money.

"Fuzzy" came along more or less by accident, but Mr. Frey is dreaming of the "edge" he would have if he could run a featherless duck farm.

"Fuzzy" came into the world queerly dressed. As he grew older his coat became queerer. Some say it is down, others think it is wool. At any rate, it is short, white and fuzzy. Hence the name.

"Fuzzy" will head a pen of breeders from which Mr. Frey expects eventually to produce ducks that will do away with the expense of hiring pluckers.

JOINT SCHOOL PLANT

Kansas Town Has Most Elaborate Affair of the Kind.

It Cost $225,000 and Pupils From Seven Districts Are Transported in Motor Buses.

Garden City, Kan.—What is described as one of the most elaborate and complete consolidated school plants in America has just been dedicated at Holcomb, seven miles west of Garden City on the western Kansas prairie. The plant cost $225,000.

Seven school districts joined to construct the single plant where the pupils may have the advantage of a city school, including manual training, domestic science and scientific training of several varieties.

Six one-room schools of the old type and a three-room school at Holcomb were abandoned in favor of the consolidated project.

The pupils are transported to the school by motor buses driven by teachers, who receive $20 a month for this extra work. The buses have a capacity of 30 to 40 pupils each.

The Holcomb consolidated school district has an area of 124½ square miles. The school population at present is 375. The new plant has a capacity of 605 grade and high school pupils.

The consolidated school group consists of seven buildings in all, with others to be added later, a first-class farm for instruction in practical agriculture, and a large athletic field.

In addition to the main high school building and a grade school building, there is a large garage for housing the motor busses, a cottage for the superintendent, and a cottage for the janitor.

FUNERAL UNDER HUGE TREE

Services for Illinoisan Held in Shade of Immense Hackberry He Owned for Forty Years.

Assumption, Ill.—Forty years of care for a hackberry tree that grew in his front yard provided Dr. R. W. Johnson, who died here, with one of the most unique places for a funeral service that this state has ever provided. His request was that the funeral be held in the old tree's shade.

Hundreds of friends who gathered at the funeral from Christian and near-by counties found that the tree's immensity was not exaggerated. It rises about 300 feet in the air and spreads over the entire yard in which the homestead is located.

Its size has balked all efforts of friends of the late Doctor Johnson to measure it with exactitude. Both kites and toy balloons have been used without satisfaction.

Seven years ago the tree's height was over 225 feet, and it is said to have grown phenomenally since. Old settlers of Christian county say it is about the same age as Doctor Johnson, who died at the age of seventy-one. Forty years ago he acquired the property upon which the tree grew, and built a home. It had already been growing then for 30 years, they said.

Under the doctor's care it has become not only a landmark, but one of the most beautiful and immense trees of the state.

Doctor Johnson was one of the pioneer physicians of central Illinois, having practiced in Christian county 45 years.

WANTS TO LOSE HIS LIONS

Trainer Asks Court to Rid Him of Animals Taken for Debt.

New Haven, Conn.—Instead of having a white elephant on his hands, Felix O. Rustand, a former circus and Coney Island animal trainer, has lions, but he insists that there is no difference in respect to the consequences.

Rustand attached the lions and took them from Bridgeport to his Short Beach shore home to satisfy a claim against Mme. Irene Castello, a performer, who was exhibiting them. He appeared before Judge John Booth to seek relief through a court order, alleging that it was costing more to keep the animals than to lose the claim against Mme. Castello, as the lions were "eating their heads off." He insisted that they should be classed as "perishable," subject to emergency court orders.

Judge Booth reserved decision.

Plants Beans 900 Years Old.

Salina, Kan.—Rev. M. M. Stoltz, librarian at the Kansas Wesleyan university, has received from Frederick Brorson, a graduate of the school, some relics from the ruins of Mesa Verde, in the national park, which will be placed in the university museum. Among them are some corn, corn cobs and beans that were taken from between rocks where scientists say they have been for 900 years. The cobs look as if they had been picked this year and the corn and beans are in a perfect state of preservation. Doctor Stoltz has planted some of the corn and beans and he declares that he believes they will sprout and grow.

BUILDING AND LUMBER PRICES

You and thousands of others have been holding off on building operations, waiting for lumber and other materials to hit the bottom. We recently published a list of figures showing that the price a year ago for 1000 feet of oak flooring would today buy, in addition, 5000 feet of lumber and still have a small surplus.

With prices at their present low level, there is no further need for delay. Building has taken a tremendous start already. Come to us with your plans and we will be glad to help select the materials best suited to your job. We carry a comblete stock at our yard and are ready to make prompt deliveries.

When Love Came to Ruby

By KATE EDMONDS

(©, 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"It's dull as ditch water," declared Ruby Dexter as the postoffice door closed behind a small colored boy. "I've been here two years, Mr. Busby, and almost every day I've thought, 'Something new will happen today'—but it's always the same old treadmill!"

Mr. Busby looked up from the stamp drawer which he was cleaning out and there was a twinkle in his jolly blue eye. "Ain't it a change to have Sammy Jones come in fer his maw's mail?" he chuckled.

Ruby groaned. "Change? Mr. Busby, you know that young one's been in here twice a day regularly for mail, and they never got one single letter yet. It makes me wild to think I'll stay here and stay and stay till I'm old and homely——"

"Maybe I'll fire ye, Ruby," interrupted Mr. Busby.

"That would be a change," agreed Ruby. "I haven't got a thing to do—mail's all made up for 3 o'clock, everything's neat as wax, I'll have to knit again—I believe I'll crochet some lace for your wife, Mr. Busby; she was admiring the butterfly pattern——"

"Ding it all, Ruby, don't put any more lace diddies into my house," objected Mr. Busby forcibly. "Everything has lace dangling from it—I ketch my fingers in the edges of the pillow slips at night and pull lamps off the table, mats and dishes off the table—make her something to wear, Ruby, that's a good girl," he counseled.

Ruby jumped up to give a letter to Deacon Smart and to poke a weekly paper through the grating at old Mrs. Fowler. "Pretty cold weather for you to be out, Mrs. Fowler," said the pretty girl pleasantly.

"It's growing warmer, Ruby, going to have a thaw," and Mrs. Fowler departed, leaving a blast of cold air in the tiny office which was perched on the very edge of the little lake. All winter long the lake had been frozen hard and there had been skating, but today was dull and lowering, with a softening of the wind that presaged a thaw.

Ruby yawned fretfully. "Nothing ever happens here," she complained.

"Make it happen, then," retorted good-natured Mr. Busby.

"How can I make it happen?" asked the girl. "No one ever comes into Lakeside village—no new people—I don't mean summer folks, they don't count—I would like to have a good time——"

"Some of our village boys would like to take you about, only you're too uppity."

"There's only one—or two—" Ruby's voice trailed off into silence.

The remainder of the day was very busy for both of them and there was little talk between the postmaster and his young assistant. Mr. Busby told Ruby that he would take her home in his sleigh that night after the office closed, as he was going down her way, but he did not tell her that big Cornelius Wayne, his nephew, would be along. Cornelius didn't know it himself until he brought the double cutter around to the postoffice at 8 o'clock. Mr. Busby got into the front sent of the double sleigh, helped Ruby into the back seat, motioned Cornelius to get in there with the girl and drove away. "See that Ruby is wrapped up warm, Corny," he commanded as he flicked his spirited black horse with the whip. "There's plenty of robes in there."

"All right, Uncle Jim." And it was apparent that Corny didn't object to being ordered around in the service of a fair lady. Ruby had always held him aloof—perhaps it was because she was afraid she would like him too well

Cornelius was a nice boy and he was making lots of money with his model chicken farm, but Ruby, in spite of her idle chatter, was afraid of love, and somehow Cornelius represented love, though she had never recognized that fact. Now the two of them rode silently side by side, with a moon breaking through the clouds to stare at them and the cold wind tingling their cheeks.

Meanwhile Mr. Busby racked his brain to think of some way to make them talk, and while he worried about it the spirited black horse brought about the desired result without being consulted at all. There was a patch of white near the graveyard, a staring white monument erected that year, and the moonlight fell upon it. The horse had seen it before and shied at it every time, and so tonight he shied again and danced around with a sharp turn of the sleigh that neatly dumped Ruby and Cornelius into a great soft snowbank that muffled their cries of dismay. In a moment the sleigh was righted and Mr. Busby had driven away, blissfully unaware of the accident.

Ruby and young Cornelius sat up in the snow and stared at each other. Then they began to laugh at their plight, and the laughter seemed to melt the strangeness of their being together. Cornelius helped Ruby out of the snow and wiped her face dry with his big white handkerchief. His fingers shook a little as he did so; her cheeks were soft and round like a baby's and her hair was soft. He wiped dry her cold little hands and brushed off the snow from her garments. "You look like an Easter rabbit," he said admiringly.

"I feel more like a snow owl," laughed Ruby. "There, Corny, you better look out for yourself. You'll be catching cold!"

"We better walk home the rest of the way," suggested Cornelius. "We can warm up, and I don't believe Uncle Jim will miss us till he gets to your house."

So he tucked Ruby's hand under his arm and they set off down the road, finding their tongues loosed, and discovering that they liked the same books and the same dances and the same phonograph records. Ruby related how she had told his uncle that very afternoon that nothing ever happened in Lakeside. "And just see what has happened tonight," she cried.

"That's right!" agreed Cornelius in an odd voice, and after that they were both very quiet, but he held her hand close in his arm all the way. When they reached Ruby's house Mr. Busby was just driving back after them. After all the explanations had been made and Mr. Busby had coughed a great deal and patted the black horse very approvingly, he told Cornelius he would take him home if he was ready to go.

"I'm going to stay and have supper with Ruby," said Cornelius boldly "She asked me to."

The next morning Ruby came into the postoffice looking very happy. "Going to be a dull day, Ruby," sang out Mr. Busby. "Nothing ever happens in Lakeside. I wish some handsome drummer would come along or ——"

"Mr. Busby," interrupted Ruby with a threat in her voice and a laugh in her eyes, "if you say anything more like that—I'll crochet some table napkins for your wife——"

"Keep 'em for your hope chest," chuckled the postmaster as he dodged out of the door.

"I wonder!" said Ruby, as she opened the wicket and gave a package to little Sammy Jones who stared incredulously. "There's a first time for everything, I s'pose," and she wasn't thinking about Sammy Jones at all.

IRENE STOLOFSKY.

IRENE STOLOFSKY, who is announced for Chautauqua's closing program, this season, is unquestionably one of the marvel violinists of her time. Her numbers are played with masterly touch, and her instrument evokes remarkable tone pictures. She seems to hold her audiences under a spell of musical wizardy and enchantment. Her playing is much like a man's in its strength and virility, but her art puts into her renditions the delicacy that only a woman can attain. She is capable of giving not only the great sonatas and concertos, but also is gifted in the presentation of the smaller and frequently the more popular numbers. She is especially effective with her descriptive pieces. As one newspaper critic remarked "Classical music is played deftly by Miss Stolofsky, but it is when in encores she gives the old familiar numbers that she steals into the inner recesses of one's soul."

To Harry Dimond, head of the Metropolitan Conservatory, Chicago, Miss Stolofsky gives much of the credit for the phenomenal success which she has attained. For several years he was her teacher, and this one-time concert master of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra acclaims her one of the real musical sensations of the present generation.

POPULAR TENOR AT CHAUTAUQUA

Harold Procter Has Enthusiastic Following In America and the British Isles.

THIS popular California tenor is to be heard on Chautauqua's closing night with Irene Stolofsky, Polish violinist, and William Janaushek, pianist. Throughout the British Isles he has sung in concert and oratorio under Richter, Gaul and other noted composers and conductors. He has traveled throughout the United States in companies headed by Kitty Gordon, Fritzie Scheff, Charlotte Greenwood and others of note. For two years he was tenor soloist at Temple Baptist Church in Los Angeles, Cal., one of the largest churches west of the Mississippi.

"Like a ribbon of gold" was the tribute paid Mr. Procter's voice by London newspaper critics during his tour of England a few years ago. He was popular with the Britishers for the same reason that he is popular with American audiences—he speaks his words with uncommon purity, those on the high notes being as plainly understood as those in the lower register. In addition, it is his custom to give a brief explanatory talk preceding each of his numbers

WRITES FINIS TO GUFFEY'S CAREER

Wall Street Once More Puts Her Quietus on Man Who Was Too Ambitious.

HIS STORY IS SENSATIONAL

Nephew of Colonel Guffey, Who Made and Lost Many Fortunes, Himself Did Some Very Spectacular Things With Oil Stocks.

New York.—When the directors resigned the other day and the Tidewater Oil company, a Standard Oil subsidiary, thus got control of the Guffey-Gillespie Oil company, insiders knew Wall street once more had written "finis" to the career of a man who "bit off more than he could chew."

The victim was Joe Guffey, more formally Joseph F. Guffey of Pittsburgh, and fully described thus:

President of the Guffey-Gillespie Oil company, with leases covering 220,000 acres in the Mid-Continent and Texas fields.

President of the Atlantic Gulf Oil corporation, controlled by the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship lines and operating around Tampico.

President of the Colombia syndicate, controlled by Guffey-Gillespie and "Agwi" and owning a million acres of oil lands along the Magdalena river in South America.

Director of Reliance Life Insurance company, and several Pittsburgh banks.

Democratic national committeeman from Pennsylvania, promoter and "angel" of A. Mitchel Palmer's last presidential boom.

Former director of sales for the alien property custodian.

Uncle Lost Many Fortunes.

Back of this announcement lies a story seldom equaled in American business and political biography. It parallels the story of another Guffey of a preceding generation. For Joe Guffey is a nephew of old Col. James M. Guffey, also of Pittsburgh, said to have made and lost more fortunes in oil than any other person in the United States.

By 1919, when the partnership was reorganized as the Guffey-Gillespie Oil company, it had become one of the largest in the midcontinent field. In addition, Guffey & Gillespie, with other Pittsburghers, acquired 125,000 acres of oil lands in Colombia, and the Colombia syndicate was formed.

Then "Agwi" entered the Mexican field, organized the Atlantic Gulf Oil company, and elected Guffey president.

Boosted Stock to $30.

Last summer Guffey found the bears out gunning for Guffey-Gillespie stock, although it had earned $9 a share the year before. Guffey began the fight which ended Tuesday in total defeat. Putting in almost every dollar he had and borrowing $2,000,000, he formed a pool to "peg" the stock with New York and Pittsburgh friends.

Late in February Guffey's pool tried to rout the bears and boosted the stock from 22 to 80. The effort exhausted his strength, and the bears, buying in New York and selling by wire in Pittsburgh, flooded the latter market. When the price reached 20 the Pittsburgh banks called their loans.

The Tidewater Oil company took over the stock held as collateral and bought enough more to give it voting control. Guffey, Gillespie and the old directors attempted to fight for places in the reorganized company. Tidewater asked for their resignations, and called for a receiver.

NAVY PERFECTS STAR SHELL

Success Marks Its Use as a Substitute for Searchlight to Locate Enemy at Sea.

Washington.—Extensive experiments to develop the use of "star shells" as a substitute for searchlights in searching for enemy craft are being conducted by the Navy department with what some officers describe as considerable success.

A "flashless" powder is being used in propelling the shells from the guns. The shells light up the sea for a wide area and officers explain that, if they can be projected without a betraying flash from the ship firing them, they will be a far advance over the searchlight, as the beams from the latter betray the exact location of the ship projecting them.

It is said that experiments have now reached the point where "star shells" that will illuminate for several minutes a great area of the sea far distant from the firing ship have been perfected, and along with them a powder which shows no flame or flash when the "star shells" are projected from the ship. For guns of three inches or smaller, the new system is said to work almost perfectly, but in the large guns it is understood that all of the flash of discharge has not yet been eliminated.

Bring Out Hoarded Gold.

London.—The widespread destitution caused by unemployment here is bringing out the gold hoarded by many persons in more prosperous times. There has been a most noticeable increase in the number of sovereigns and half-sovereigns in circulation in the last few weeks. Previously it was only on rare occasions that a sovereign or half-sovereign was tendered.

TOURISTS ARE ANGRY

Extortion Practiced in Paris Arouses Americans.

French Authorities Tell Them the Remedy Is in Their Own Hands.

Paris.—The effect of the high cost of living in Paris upon tourist trade, as indicated by the growing frequency of complaints of extortion by Americans visiting France, is occupying the attention of the government.

The authorities hold that the tourists have the cure largely in their own hands, exaggerated prices being due in large part to indiscriminate spending by visitors, aided by the spendthrift tendency of French profiteers.

It is admitted that abuses practiced in amusement resorts, where meals, wine and dancing are provided have their effect upon prices in general, but how to correct that evil without discouraging the most profitable trade is a question.

Undersecretary of State Paisant discussing the question with Americans, proposes publicity as a remedy. He has invited American visitors to lodge in a protest which will be published in the Paris press, and he also will take up personally individual cases of extortion brought to his attention.

The most frequent causes of complaint are charges for lodgings in hotels and apartments. Mr. Paisant told the Americans he had decided to ask hotels to publish their rates in the papers. This remedy would not, however, affect apartments, which are the subject of profiteering on a scale hitherto unknown.

There are very few unfurnished apartments to let, according to the real estate agencies; as fast as vacated by tenants, they are transformed into furnished apartments and either let at rentals of from 300 to 1,000 per cent higher than the average before the war for furnished apartments of the same class, or rented at an increase of 200 to 300 per cent above the average for unfurnished apartments, with the proviso that the tenant buy the furniture at excessive figures.

THIS MAKES MR. HAYS HAPPY

His Policy of Humanizing the Postoffice Department Results in Saving a Woman's Life.

Washington.—Postmaster Will H. Hays probably is the happiest man in Washington today. His slogan "Humanize the Postoffice Department" has been carried out to what appears to be the limit. Here is the story:

In a little Nebraska farmhouse a woman lay dying for lack of medical attention. The nearest physician was Dr. Selby at North Platte. True, North Platte was only two miles away, but between the dying woman and the physician was the South Platte river, flooded to a raging torrent that had swept away every bridge near and far.

Dr. Selby had telephoned to every town within a radius of twenty miles. At each turn it was the same disheartening story—bridges gone and no way of fording the turbulent waters.

Just when all hope seemed gone, Dr. Selby remembered something. Somewhere he had read that the postmaster general was "humanizing" the postoffice department. He rushed to the telephone and asked C. A. Sluder, manager of the air mail field at North Platte, to take him across the river in an airplane.

"Sorry," said Sluder, "but I couldn't without getting authority from Washington first."

"But the woman is dying," the physician urged.

"In that case," replied Sluder, "we will take you first and get the authority afterward."

So it was that the life of a woman in an humble Nebraska farmhouse was saved just because the postoffice department has been humanized. And so it is that Postmaster General Hays is probably the happiest man in Washington.

A TOAST TO THE NEW-BORN BABE

Here's a toast to the dear little man;
Upon his arrival in this strange land,
Who, from that realm of the vast unknown
Into this world on wings has flown.

Here's to the dear little laughing eyes—
Out of which some day, he will look with surprise
When he views first the treasures stored
In this beautiful land yet unexplored.

Here's to the dear little dimpled hands—
With which some day he may conquer new lands.
In this world of conflict and tasks galore
May be grasp each opportunity and look for more.

Here's to the dear little kicking feet—
When he comes to the various paths he will meet,
May they choose the one, the weary and sore,
That will eventually lead to the Shining Shore.

Man's Fake "Meal Ticket" Lands Him in Cell at House of Correction.

Philadelphia.—A doubting restaurant keeper converted a note for credit on a meal into evidence that brought a jail sentence when Edward Clark, New York, was sentenced to three months in the house of correction for his act of deception.

Clark came to the restaurant of Jake Levy for breakfast. In lieu of payment he produced a note which he said was from his father, asking for credit for the meal.

Levy doubted the man's story and marched him to the station house around the corner, where he admitted his deception and Magistrate Dougherty sent him to jail.

HEROIC CANARY DIES

Considered the Most Valuable Employee of Bureau of Mines.

Used to Detect Presence of Carbon Monoxide in Mines—"Baldy" Survived Five Explosions.

Washington.—"Baldy," hero of the mines, is dead. After surviving five explosions, in the last of which he was overcome nine times while engaged in rescue work, he has won his reward. The bureau of mines considered him probably the most valued employee it ever had.

In underground fires or explosions the life of the miner depends almost entirely upon the behavior of these "hero birds." The rescuer ventures into an exploded mine with a flame safety lamp in one hand and a caged canary in the other.

The bird, in the presence of even the smallest amount of carbon monoxide, gasps, ruffles its wings and flutters. If sufficient gases are present the bird drops, seemingly lifeless. The rescue party then steps back to good air and is usually able to revive the bird by quick action.

Such was the work of "Baldy," and when he started to grow old he was finally sent to the Pittsburgh station from the bureau's rescue car, which had been his home for three years. It was intended that he should live the rest of his days in song and contentment.

Then came another explosion and it was necessary to draft "Baldy." Nine times he fluttered unconscious to the bottom of the cage and nine times was revived. The experience was too much, even for a veteran like "Baldy," and he developed fatal pneumonia.

After a rescuer has once used a canary, it is explained, he places a very complete dependence in it. Often when a rescuer has become nervous or has a real or imaginary headache, the sight of the bird, alert on his perch, reassures him.

WOMAN BLAMES BOYS

"It is the boys who are setting the pace for gayety that the girls think they must live up to," declares Dr. Valeria Parker, noted sociologist who has just been appointed executive secretary to the interdepartmental social hygiene board. "The boys are simply demoralizing the girls," she says. "They are spending all their money on clothes and all they think about is having good times, so it is no wonder the girls have gone to all the extremes of dress that they have. It is just a case of competition." Dr. Parker's new work will be the protection of young soldiers at naval and military bases from the gayety of large cities.

The sermon by Dr. Robbins on "The Divine Radium" was pronounced the best he has ever preached in this church. This was followed by the tesher daughter to the altar and told how that daughter had been afflicted with lockjaw twelve days and nights attended by four doctors who gave her up to die, but when they sent for Dr. Robbins to pray with her the daughter was made whole and the doctors acknowledged it was by the power of Christ in answer to prayer. Others told how by the application of radium and prayer they had been wonderfully healed of malignant cancer. The service closed by the immersion of a little black eyed, black haired girl and then an aged man whose hair was white as snow. The cures wrought in this church are nothing less than miracles in the days of the Apostles. Come and see when the pastor is in his pulpit.

Tests Wine in Divorce Case, Asks Nominal Fee

Omaha, Neb.—J. T. Bohan, Omaha real estate man, was required to sample 700 gallons of old wine. Acting as "referee" in the divorce case of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henos, he was requested by attorneys to ascertain if the wine was in good condition. In the divorce case Henas, according to attorneys, had agreed at the time of an out-of-court property settlement to take "everything in the cellar." The wine, which the Henas couple had made together, was five years old. Some of it was seven years. Bohan reported the wine in "excellent condition" and stated that his fee would be "nominal."

WAR'S GREATEST HERO IS IN NEED

Sergeant York May Be Forced to Give Up Farm Through Mortgage Foreclosure.

CROPS TURN OUT FAILURE

Refuses to Save Himself by Commercializing His Fame and Declines Attractive Movie Offers—His Feat in Argonne.

Pall Mall, Tenn.—If you were living on one of the finest farms in Tennessee—

If you had a wife and three-months-old baby dependent upon you—

If you faced losing your farm through foreclosure of a $12,500 mortgage—

And—

You could make possibly enough to pay off the mortgage merely by showing yourself in public—

Would you?

That is the question that Sergeant Alvin C. York has to face. His answer is "No." He will not commercialize his patriotism. His sense of obligation to his country and his religious scruples prevent.

"I would far rather lose my farm and go back to work upon it as a day laborer than to commercialize the fame which was only incidental to an act of Providence," he says.

That "act of Providence" made the red-headed sergeant famous as the war's greatest hero, not only throughout America but in every allied country.

On Oct. 16, 1918, in the Argonne forest, York single-handed killed 25 Germans, put out of commission 35 machine guns and marched into camp 132 German captives, including a major and three lieutenants. For his feat he won the Congressional Medal of Honor and the Croix de Guerre, pinned on by Marshal Foch.

Spurns Movie Stage.

Spurning movie and vaudeville offers that would have made him rich, he came back to his mother's hillside farm and took up the hoe.

A short time later he married a girl of the neighborhood. Friends and admirers picked out a farm for him almost directly across the road from the farm of his mother, and paid $11,285 on it through popular subscription.

For a time things moved serenely. York, whose whole ambition had been to own a home in his Tennessee mountains, farm his own land, hunt the foxes that roamed the hills and show true hospitality to the strangers who passed his door, was wholly content.

A little later Alvin C. Jr. came, and life seemed even more worth living.

But such good fortune was not to last.

Crops Are a Failure.

Crops were a big disappointment. Farm products brought exceptionally low prices. Taxes reached an unprecedented high figure.

With the $12,500 mortgage for the balance on his farm due this fall, things went from bad to worse. A $250 grocery bill accumulated and the grocer feels unable to extend much more credit.

York is toiling from "kin to kant"—from earliest break of day to the last lingering of light—to prevent his life's dream from being shattered. But it looks like a vain task.

"Religious faith sustained me in my danger and removed my fear," he says. "I was only a pawn in the hand of Providence. Any credit that is due for my achievements should go to the Lord. For me to attempt to take any credit personally would be a great sin.

"But He will see me through!"

YOKE THEIR WIVES WITH OXEN

Moroccan Men Despise Work, but Think It Good for Their Women Folk.

Ceuta, Morocco.—Apart from all international agreements and political reasons, the stranger in the Spanish zone of Morocco soon reaches the conclusion that humane feeling and propriety call for an effort to bring the inhabitants of Morocco into contact with civilizing influences.

The sloth and misery, existing among the men of Morocco strike one on every hand. They despise labor of any kind for the purpose of making a living. They think it good, however, for their woman folk and see no inconsistency in harnessing their wives with beasts of burden.

Frequently women may be seen carrying their infants in leather sacks slung at their sides while they are attached to the same yoke as a decrepit bullock or a consumptive cow dragging a clumsy cart. Behind them their lords and masters hold lengthy discussions, never giving aid even in the most difficult circumstances.

To Make 12-Ton Cheese.

Albany, N. Y.—The state department of farms and markets, working in co-operation with the Dairymen's league, will manufacture the largest single cheese ever made, according to George B. Hogue, commissioner of agriculture. The cheese will be manufactured at Lowerville for exhibition at the state fair in September. It will weigh 12 tons and will require 150,000 pounds of milk, or one day's output of 7,500 cows, Mr. Hogue said.

ARMY WOMAN A LEPER

Wife of Colonel Contracts Disease in Philippines.

Case Held Comparatively Slight One—Woman Now in Federal Leprosarium in Louisiana.

Washington.—That the case of leprosy of which Mrs. Lutz Wahl, forty-seven, wife of Colonel Wahl, was recently discovered to be a victim was contracted while Mrs. Wahl was in the Philippines with her husband several years ago, is the supposition of physicians attending her.

The discovery was made accidentally during an examination by Col. D. C. Howard, army medical corps, on duty at Walter Reed General hospital, for another complaint. It was the first intimation Mrs. Wahl had had of the ailment, and almost up until that day she fulfilled her numerous social obligations here.

Colonel Howard reported to Surgeon General Cummings of the public health service and Dr. William C. Fowler, District health officer, and requested permission to send Mrs. Wahl to the federal leprosarium in Louisiana. The permission granted, Mrs. Wahl left Washington the following morning and is now at the leprosarium.

According to the report to the public health service, Mrs. Wahl's case is a comparatively slight one and was discovered almost as soon as the first signs appeared. How long the disease has been in her blood physicians could not say, as the period of incubation ranges from five to twenty years.

During the war Colonel Wahl held the rank of brigadier general.

ASKS FINE BURIAL DRESS

St. Louis Woman Demands Fashionable Garb, Not Shroud, for Funeral.

St. Louis.—A request that her burial robe "shall be a fine white dress made in fashion and not a shroud" was contained in a codicil to the will of the late Mrs. Jennie S. Dana, filed in the Probate court by Otto Hampe, public administrator, who will administer the estate. She asked that her wedding ring be buried with her.

The codicil said many conditions have changed since the original will was made, and that a mortgage of $3,200 on her residence had been canceled.

Numerous oil paintings, some of which were by the testator's first husband, the late William Winter, also were bequeathed to relatives. To Mrs. Virginia Dana, wife of the late George Dana, is bequeathed the painting of "The Bull,' which she admired so much," or "the large blue vases" of the late Mrs. Dana.

"To George Dana of Kirkwood," the document continues, "I leave any painting in my collection he may choose." Numerous other bequests of paintings are made.

Mrs. Dana bequeathed her writing desk to Flora G. Taylor of Cincinnati, and requests that the medals awarded to her first husband for his art work be sent to an institution in Cairo, Ill.

CHOLERA RAGING IN RUSSIA

Dread Plague Already Has Claimed Thousands of Lives—Towns Hit Hardest.

Stockholm. — Asiatic cholera is spreading rapidly in the whole of European Russia, according to the public health recorder. There were 6,000 cases reported up to June 25.

Towns are more subject to the infection than rural districts; recently Petrograd and Moscow have become infected, the disease spreading quickly, being propagated by the unusually hot weather and refugees who have fled from the famine districts.

According to the Roota news agency in Moscow, all the imperial castles and country houses of the nobility in the Crimea will be converted into hospitals.

MOTHER, SON IN DEATH PACT

Americans, Residents of Paris, Try Suicide Because of Money Troubles.

Paris.—Mme. De Guise-Hite and her son, George Harbough, American residents of Paris, are in a serious condition here as the result of an alleged suicide pact. Their supposed attempt is attributed to financial difficulties. Physicians are working hard to revive them, but fears were expressed that their deaths would ensue soon.

Mme. De Guise-Hite is the divorced wife of an Englishman, having married him following her divorce from George Harbough, said to be a Cleveland millionaire.

Stop Train to Save Man Slowly Sinking Into Bog

Minneapolis, Minn.—Adolph Peimar, 50, was pulled from a bog near Holdbridge by trainmen and passengers of a Great Northern train, which stopped to rescue him. Peimar, it is believed, was overcome by heat. As the train made its morning trip the conductor noticed the man sitting in the mud. Returning in the evening he saw the head of a man sticking out, and stopped the train.

Caught in the Rebound

By Martha McWilliams

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Action and reaction being always equal, how was Benning to disprove the axiom? Be sure it was no question of his asking—he did not, indeed, realize its existence. He was, you see, self-sufficient with malice aforethought, hence took no account of the winds of chance.

Yet they had blown him through painfully meager college years to a scholarly degree that he felt assured success still greater. Thus he had had no time for playing, still less for the pretty game of love-making—there expressed concretely in expensive things like flowers, candy, auto and theater parties, not to mention giddy raiment of the latest mode. Girls meant all these—so imperatively Benning had stoically passed them up. Notwithstanding, he did not lack sex-consciousness—but it was so braided in with thrift and ambition that he had held it rigidly in check. Yet in the backmost corner of his mind, where he visioned a future of eminence, he stored an appraisal of Persis Moen, not strictly of the college set, her father being only an adjunct professor in the lethargic law branch of the university. Persis looked thrift personified—and lived up to it, yet owned a delicate small prettiness, and a gently clipt speech, that wasted no breath in undue emphasis.

If he did not tell her so outright he knew she understood—as is the privilege of such ingrowing natures. So when he plunged into the world of affairs, got a foothold, only to be swept from it by the war flood, he felt that only an "if" stood between them. Several ifs, in fact—if she lacked patience, if another man desired her, if he himself found out somebody more to his advantage—even the dazzling "if" of sudden success that would set him beyond her potentialities—all these he pondered, but ended by leaving his mind clouded with mists, only now and then roseate.

Luck lay in wait for him. Home from the wars, with never a scratch, she opened a way for him, not gilt-edged but gilt-paved. It led to millions, some few years ahead. Meantime he had to get acclimated in the atmosphere of wealth—learn to dress with such quiet elegance it all but amounted to camouflage, to forget the name of money, except when he seemed to himself to squander it—and to do the squandering with the gayest good will. He caught quickly the disparaging implication of "tightwad." There Poppy was a rock of refuge Poppy being the synonym of a super faithful buddy, unreasonably rich and reasonably sensible. Through the medium of his own hearty sincerity he saw Benning as a wonder. Therefore he was glad to sponsor him socially, even to make him known to Melitta Vane, the queen of his own affections.

Melitta was, after a sort, compounded of saint and siren. Vividly beautiful, alive to her finger tips, dancing like a maenad and singing like a thrush in June, she had undisputed right to be first in the hearts of her countrymen. Benning had no intention of disputing the right—when it came to Poppy Sanders ,there was another story. Poppy had already more than he deserved—besides, he could not possibly need Melitta as Benning himself did. Hence, therefore and because, Benning set himself sedulously to the supplanting of his friend. At first casually, covertly, but soon by open and eager pursuit. He haunted her waking hours, wrote to her daily or oftener, sent fine, small, well-chosen gifts upon any occasion, or none, and by clever maneuvering made himself her social complement upon the most part of important affairs.

Fate appeared to have taken the case for him. Somehow there was a growing distance betwixt Melitta and Poppy—not an open break, but a withdrawing from camaraderie. Poppy had spells of being actually taciturn but Melitta, away from him, was gayer than ever. Benning flattered himself that it was because of him—a woman's heart, like the moon, thought he, had always a man in it. No other man should have a chance to set his image in Melitta's breast. Since two bodies cannot occupy the same space, Benning was relying a lot upon preemptions. The sense of security they bred in him went to his head—he not only spent with both hands almost ostentatiously but got a mad joy from the spending. Melitta loved luxury—he wanted to prove to her that with his potentialities capitalized, as was easily possible, as his wife she would need only to wish for a thing and have it.

He fancied her ambitions, therefore he played upon her skillfully, but without ceasing in full stream, all the celebrities with whom he had touch, social or official. Also he let her know indirectly that he had not yet reached apogee. If he chose he could slide into politico-capitalistic life, where his brains, plus influence, would soon exalt him greatly. He visioned Melitta an embassadress, presented and presenting at courts, a cabinet lady, even dimly, first lady of the land. She would grace any station—he told her so more than once. She made faces at him, calling him flatterer, but he knew she was not offended. So he ventured upon open love-making, with a warmth and earnestness that amazed himself. She listened, sometimes laughing, sometimes yawning, giving him neither yea-say nor nay-say, but elfin oracles that made her more than ever maddening.

This could not last forever. Two careers were open to him—which he should choose depended on Melitta. One, semi-scientific, spelled secure consequence among men of his sort, but nothing spectacular, no beating of drums nor sounding of tomtoms. This was greatly to his inclination—he truly loved delving into deep things. But over against it there lay a breathless opportunity to gain, by somewhat of risk, millions, great power, and the whole world's applause. It would mean Paradise—plus Melitta. Without her he refused to let himself think. Instead, he went to her, rather white-faced and shaken, but feeling himself so full of compelling he did not doubt the result.

She met him on the piazza, her eyes starry, her lips falling instantly into a soft, merry smile. "I was wishing you'd come—right away," she said. "Did that bring you? Or is it just a happen so?"

"Providence brought me, I think—if you wished for me," Benning began in a throaty voice he hardly recognized as his own. Melitta started a little and drew a pace away, saying with her head high: "Maybe so! But you would have known before morning anyway. Poppy is looking for you to ask if you'll help us—we have to be married early tomorrow—and there is so much needs doing."

"Tomorrow!" Benning echoed, laughing hollowly. "When I thought you were done with him."

"You have a trick of making mistakes," she answered gravely. "As for instance, thinking you could supplant your most useful friend. As soon as we realized it, Poppy said: 'Let him go as far as he likes—'"

Benning waited for no further words as he rushed away. Poppy met him, held out his hand and smiled rather grimly, saying: "From your look, if I want to say good-by, now is the time."

Six weeks later Mr. and Mrs. Poppy Sanders got wedding cards from Benning and his bride—the sometime Persis Moen. They laughed softly over them—Poppy had heard something of Persis in reservation—and said one to another: "He got caught in the rebound."

Explorer Decries Mannish Garb of London Women

London.—British women are losing womanliness by adopting the dress as well as the habits of men, according to Mrs. Rosita Forbes, the famous explorer.

While clergymen are denouncing women for drinking, smoking and swearing Mrs. Forbes deplores most the custom of cutting off the hair and the adoption of mannish garb.

"Women should keep their womanhood," said Mrs. Forbes. "It is certainly better to be a perfect woman than an imperfect man."

LADY SURMA OF ASSYRIA

In the future the Assyrian will no "come down like a wolf on the fol... for a woman is to head the govern... ment of the new Assyrian nation. Lady Surma is expected to be the first woman president in the world—as she has been the first woman ambassador—so soon as the national parliament of the Assyrians is organized. Great Britain recently assigned a little territory comprising 80,000 square miles in the mountains of Kurdistan to the Assyrian people. Lady Surma obtained this concession from the British government, having acted as ambassador at London. She is an accomplished linguist and has been thoroughly educated under the guidance of British tutors. Her brother, Mar Chimon, was patriarch of the Assyrians. He was murdered.

Winnipeg, Man.—The wool clip for western Canada this year will be in the neighborhood of 5,000,000 pounds. Alberta's wool clip is estimated at 2,200,000, which is about the same as last year. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia are expected to contribute about 3,000,000 pounds to the total.

DOG HERO AGAIN HONORED

"Stubby," famous American Expeditionary Force mascot, was awarded by General John J. Pershing another medal in addition to his already long string of medals. It was a gold medal presented by the Humane Education society. "Stubby" was the official mascot of the American Expeditionary Forces and has been decorated many times, including medals from foreign monarchs. He wears two wound stripes, having been twice wounded on the battle field. Photo shows "Stubby" after his new decoration.

FRENCH AIR FLEET PROPOSED

Bill Advocates Force of Commercial Planes Readily Convertible for War Purposes.

Paris.—A fleet of 1,000 airplanes, suitable for war, is proposed in a bill now before the chamber of deputies. It is planned to establish and operate these aircraft commercially, so that the cost to the government would be little if any more than under its present policy.

The author of the measure, Deputy Paul Benazet, called attention to the large and expensive aviation personnel of the government "which consumes but does not produce."

Strongly advocating the creation of a great protecting aerial force, M. Benazet urged that the government create a corporation to operate commercially, transporting passengers and freight and establishing air postal routes, thus training aviators, developing aviation, cementing relations with the colonies and meantime keeping the fleet ready for immediate conversion to war purposes.

Eve and Adam Amid Ozark Chiggers—Divorce

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Asserting that her husband compelled her to imitate Eve while he impersonated Adam upon a tract of land in the Ozark mountains, chigger infested Mrs. Mary King Young, 23, was given a divorce. The court held that a leaf was not adequate protection against chiggers.

RADIO CONTROL OF SHIPS NEXT

Successful Steering of Iowa From Another Vessel Leads to New Tests.

PLAN TO EQUIP OTHER SHIPS

Battleship Runs Without a Hitch Five Miles From Operator During Bomb Tests—Army and Navy Officers Call It a Scientific Triumph.

Washington.—The performance of the battleship Iowa under radio control during recent aerial bombing tests may lead to revolutionary changes in naval development, officers think. Without a person on board, the Iowa was maneuvered from the battleship Ohio, five miles away, with the utmost precision and there was not a hitch in the mechanism in more than two hours while the Iowa was being bombed.

It was a scientific triumph. The Iowa was a real "Flying Dutchman," a counterpart of that mythical crewless ghost of the seas, as she obeyed the will of Capt. F. L. Chadwick on the Ohio, almost hull down on the horizon. The invisible, magic fingers of the radio reached out across the sea to whirl the Iowa's steering wheel, operate the fuel oil and water supply valves and start and stop the ship.

So perfectly did the control function that the officer on the Ohio maneuvered the Iowa away from the attacking air forces at the moment the bombs were being released, varying the speed of the target vessel at will.

Officers Much Impressed.

Army and navy officers who witnessed the test were much impressed by the possibilities of development of the radio control idea for use in future wars. It was said to be apparent that radio control might eliminate some loss of life in such enterprises as "block ship" operations as when the British undertook at Zeebrugge and Ostend to bottle up German submarines. The "block ship" of the future, it was pointed out, might sail serenely into an enemy harbor without a soul on board and be sunk to obstruct its channel by the electrical explosion of her magazines.

Already the navy is working out plans for shifting control at will from a surface vessel like the Ohio to aircraft, either heavier or lighter than air. The radio control device on the Ohio is so simple, officers say, that little difficulty is anticipated in adapting it for use in an airplane or a dirigible.

When this development is worked out the controlling aircraft will be able to work at an altitude of 10,000 feet and above, safe from any gunfire from below, and steer the controlled vessel anywhere on the sea within fuel radius.

To Equip Other Ships.

A movement is afoot to install radio control on at least one more obsolete battleship and two old destroyers to serve as targets for aerial bombing practice and further experiments with radio control. Extension of experiments to the possibility of applying the radio control idea to aircraft also is under consideration and it is within probabilities that giant crewless bombing planes, loaded with high explosives could be launched against naval vessels, cities and forts with no costly sacrifice of trained officers and men.

The entire radio control idea, a post-war development, in its present application is in its infancy, naval officers believe, and they expect great developments in the efficiency and scope of the control within the next few years.

BEHEADINGS SOLE DIVERSION

Executions Take Place of Movies in Chinese Town—Justice Works Swiftly.

Suchien, Kiangsu Province.—Instead of moving pictures, baseball games or similar diversions of the Western world, Chinese communities like this little town have as their sole form of public amusement the rather frequent public executions.

Efforts of the authorities to check the depredations of numerous bands of robbers in this district result in the capture of not a few of the offenders, who ordinarily are dealt with summarily.

An example of how swiftly justice sometimes works in China was given recently when 13 robbers were executed. Seven had been under arrest less than 24 hours.

Makes Beer of American Rice.

New Orleans.—The rice exchange here reports that Germany is purchasing huge quantities of low-grade American rice to make beer for export to Mexico, Central and South American countries, which until recently were supplied by the United States breweries. Exports of rice on one day from this port are given out at 2,508,100 pounds.

Let's go to the lawn fete, Broad and Richardson, Saturday evening July 30th.

Missive Sent From York, Pa., on February 18, 1907, Arrives in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia.—When William H. Fiss, 5549 Walnut street, received a postal card recently which was mailed just ten and a half years before he thought a record for slowness of mail delivery had been established. But David J. Spangler, 1421 North Redfield street, can go him one better, for he received a card posted on February 18, 1907, more than fourteen years ago, by a woman who has been dead for more than twelve years. Spangler's antique exhibit was sent from York, Pa., by his greataunt, arriving in this city on June 23 last. It was addressed to him at 42 Frazer street, the home from which he moved in 1908.

"I guess some persons who are awaiting mail," Mr. Spangler remarks, "will take courage after this and wait with a little more patience."

Fire Caused by Sun Shining in Window

Philadelphia.—A piece of window glass is believed by the firemen to have been responsible for a small fire on the roof of a vacant dwelling. According to the firemen the glass concentrated the sun's rays to such an extent they ignited the roof. The blaze quickly spread to an adjoining house, but was extinguished with trifling loss.

Finds Cure for "Flu."

London.—A new prevention for influenza has been discovered by Dr. J. A. Taylor, a prominent English medico. Describing the result of his experiment in the British Medical Journal, Doctor Taylor says ordinary tincture of iodine is mixed with honey and placed on the tongue every two or three hours or oftener.

Vol. 5. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, August 4, 1921 No. 16

New Home Building

If you do not think a building boom of homes has struck the Hilltop, just take a stroll one of these "cool" evenings (or better still, hitch up your auto and ride) over the Hilltop and see for yourself. The Hilltop should be congratulated that the building in this section of the city is that of single homes, which eventually means home owners in the community. People owning their own homes become splendid citizens, as their interests are staple and they naturally make up their minds to boost their own community as well as their own homes. No section of the city of Columbus today is more fortunate that the Hilltop in that respect. Time and space will not permit mentioning all the new homes going up over the Hilltop in this issue of the Record, so we have taken this week to mention those north of Broad street, where there have been close to 50 new homes built, and being built this season already, besides many that are yet to be started. Next week we hope to take the district south of Broad street.

Mr. Greer B. Orr is building four 6-room moderns on North Ogden, one of which is nearly completed, he expects to occupy. He is also building a 6-room modern for Mr. Wyatt at the corner of Steele and Ogden.

Mr. S. Z. Neff has completed his new 6-room bungalow at the corner of Ridge and Ogden, and recently moved his family into it.

Mr. Daily of North Monroe avenue, will soon occupy his new 6-room bungalow on North Warren.

Mr. G. H. Pinny of the East Side, has under way a very pretty 5-room frame bungalow with sleeping porch on North Ogden.

Mr. George Matson, contractor, is building up two double brick moderns, of six rooms a side, one on North Harris and one on North Warren.

Mrs. Wright expects to build a home on North Ogden, soon.

Mr. P. J. Robinson and family just moved into their beautiful 6-room modern at 203 North Terrace.

Mr. Chase E. Kimes of 140 Highland avenue, has his pretty 6-room bungalow at 140 North Terrace about completed and will occupy it before long.

Mr. F. E. Kimes is expecting to start the erection of a 6-room modern on North Terrace above Steele, in a few days.

Mr. I. J. Clark is hard at work on his pretty 5-room brick bungalow at North Terrace and Ridge avenues.

Mr. A. N. Tracy and family recently took possession of their beautiful six-room frame at 66 North Oakley.

A very pretty 5-room brick bungalow on North Burgess near Ridge avenue, is said to be the property of Mr. Dick Koernes.

Mr. A. O. Baaler, 253 North Burgess is putting up a double garage on the rear of his lot, facing on Ridge avenue.

Mr. William Ireland has just about finished his new 8-room bungalow to be occupied by his family at 180 North Ogden.

Mr. Walter Brokaw's new 6-room frame on Eldon, north of Steele, is well under way.

A 5-room bungalow at North Park and Steele is being erected by Mr. Iams, contractor.

Mr. J. R. Groves has under construction a 6-room frame at 133 North Park.

Mr. O. R. Orebaugh is erecting five 6-room frames north of Broad street —two on North Warren, two on North Burgess and one at 222 North Ogden.

A 6-room frame on North Ogden, near Steele, will be occupied by Mr. Roy Latham.

Mr. Robert Day is getting a 6-room modern on North Warren.

Mr. Emrich is putting in the foundation for a new brick at North Harris and Ridge.

The finishing work on a 6-room frame on North Warren, for Mr. Ewald is being pushed along.

An elegant, large modern frame on Ridge, near Eldon, is now about ready for finishing touches. It is a beauty.

Rush Hour in Cairo.

To know what the other half thinks is often more important to common happiness than to know how they live. Men of many sorts have railed against crowded trolleys and trams in all the civilized cities and towns of the world, but how few in the vein of Al-Kashkul when writing to the Egyptian Mail last month. He does not raise his objection because he cannot jam himself into the mass of traveling humanity before the car door is slammed in his face, as men in New York well may. He does not object because he has to rise and give his seat to a woman, as men in many places do. He states plainly that he ceased to observe this custom, when he discovered that women seemed to expect it, rather "enjoying seeing on their feet men for half an hour, tottering right and left like a reed in a storm." No. He objects because women use the cars when they see that men want them. "As ladies are not in a hurry as men are, they can wait a little to take the next tram."—Christian Science Monitor.

It has reached the ears of the members of St. John's Lutheran Church that some children are soliciting contributions, passing as agents of the congregation, who are collecting funds to aid in the erection of the new church on Broad and Hague. St. John's has authorized no one to solicit except from its own membership, and those engaged in this work are impostors. The congregation in question does not approve of house to house canvassing. If anyone will furnish the name and address of one or more of thes solicitors to Pastor Lose, St. John's will be thankful.

Be Loyal to Our Merchants

During the days of depression in business, especially mid-summer months, when buying is very slow, it certainly would be an appropriate thing to do, if each and every Hilltop resident would make it a rule, as far as possible, to patronize our Hilltop merchants and business firms. One can hunt the city over and can not find a better, more honorable and obliging set of business men than we have right here on the Hilltop. When anything of a public nature, to benefit the community, comes up, you find our business men ready, with cash and time, to lend a willing hand and boost to their utmost. Take the Chautauqua, for instance, and you will see that with but very few exceptions the men who put the "go" into it were business men. When a church wants help, the business man gives it a helping hand to his utmost. And we might enumerate many things besides but all know the facts without doing so. Then if this is the fact, does not the Hilltop business man deserve your support as far as is possible? 'Tis true one can not get everything wanted on the Hilltop, but BUY WHAT YOU CAN HERE and get the rest over town. Suppose, by business depression, some of our business houses would be compelled to suspend business till things livened up and we all had to go over town for a spool of thread, a pound of nails, or window curtains, or pair of shoes or necktie, etc., would it pay? Would such conditions help to boost Hilltop property? Our prospective home buyers, etc., would see a small inducement to locate here if such were the case. Then is it not up to each and every public spirited and community loving resident to BE LOYAL TO OUR COMMUNITY AND BUY IT ON THE HILLTOP every time it is possible to do so?

The Best Laid Plans

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"There are just three things that I can do to perfection," Molly Monroe said gravely, "scramble eggs, flirt, and arrange flowers."

"I'm quite sure you're right," John Adams answered. "You're right about most things."

He stood up suddenly and the laughter went out of Molly's red-brown eyes and she opened her lips to say: "You're not going?" but she closed them again as John looked at her with his mouth rather hard and unpleasantly firm and his eyes that held no ray of laughter said: "Good-night."

"Good-night," she answered.

He did not offer his hand and she watched him go out of the room and out of the house without moving. But when she was sure that he had gone she flung herself down among the pillows and buried her red-brown head into their soft depths.

He wasn't coming back! She knew it. For three months she had provoked him and teased him and laughed at him, and all because she knew the moment she ceased she would begin to do something else, and John Adams would know.

He had seemed to like it all at first. He had laughed and teased back until on the sudden he changed. He had an odd way of looking at Molly, and then dropping his eyes. And Molly had been cold with terror one moment and thrilling with joy the next.

All because a young man with straight brown hair and a pair of steady blue eyes and a mouth that was clean and kind had a certain way of looking at her.

And then tonight he had said: "I wonder if a girl would marry a man

Instead, She Sat Straight Up.

if she knew she had to live very simply, do her own cooking and keep house herself?" He had fumbled and grown darkly red, and Molly had answered:

"I'm sure most girls would love to do that sort of thing, but there are just three things that I can do to perfection—scramble eggs and flirt and arrange flowers!"

He had taken it the wrong way, of course, and had gone—he thought she had been laughing at him all the time, and this was her way of showing it.

"Oh, why did I ever have such a troublesome tongue in my head!" Molly groaned. "It's done bad enough things to me before, but look what it's done now."

Although she was in the very depths of despair she did not give way to tears. Of what use are tears when they only redden their nose and make you worse off than before?

Instead, she sat straight up among her pillows and decided on a course of action.

Several minutes later she had taken off her frilly blouse and her silk skirt. She had slipped on an enveloping gingham apron of such a delectable pink that it made housework almost fun, and she had run down the back stairs and thrust open the kitchen door and fallen to work.

Daddy was coming home from that tiresome board meeting, and with him those three men, and she knew what they would like as well as anything they could eat.

Coffee that bubbled in the blue enamel pot and biscuits that were beaten up in a yellow bowl and put in deep iron pans, and oysters with a cream sauce steaming hot with just the hint of a lemon in it!

When she heard her father's key in the door she called: "I hope you all will eat a little something," and she had the places set at the round dining room table, and laid everything ready before she disappeared.

Then she crept up the back stairs the way she had come down. Now [illegible] excitement was over she felt very tired, after all the emotions of the evening. Molly saw with surprise that it was only ten o'clock. And she had thought it must be mid night!

But what was she going to do? She couldn't write to John Adams, he would be just stiff-necked enough to —oh, she couldn't write him. Besides, what could she say? "That she did know a girl who would keep house for a man and cook and live simply, and that her name was Molly Monroe, and her address 74 West street?"

She scouted the idea!

John Adams was proud; she knew he would never let any girl laugh at him—besides he would always believe just what she had said, that scrambling eggs was the extent of her knowledge, and flirting was what she had been doing the last three months—instead of falling in love.

But it was not until midnight that she hit on the scheme that was to smooth the rough path of her heart's desire.

John Adams boarded with the crochety Miss Porter. And Molly found herself more and more cultivating Miss Porter. At first she just dropped in, then she had a cup of tea, and at last went so far as to exchange recipes on cake. Not until she had known her for a week did Molly Monroe confide what she wished to do. "If Miss Porter would let her get dinner some night, one of those nights when Miss Porter was going to the Ladies' Aid—she, Molly, would be so glad! Mr. Adams would never know the difference, she would just lay the things on the table and ring the bell as Miss Porter always did."

Very meekly Miss Porter acquiesced.

Molly, bright-cheeked and dimpling, was in Miss Porter's kitchen an hour before she needed to be, but she had been waiting for one week for just this opportunity. If you can call an opportunity something that has been planned to the last detail!

Such a dinner as she would get! She had bought the plump capon herself, and the vegetables, too, were hers. Miss Porter was only to supply the odds and ends, the flour and the butter and all the seasonings.

By five o'clock everything was getting along nicely. Molly was already planning the sentences she would say when John Adams cried: "But I didn't know you could cook! And where is Miss Porter?"

It seemed at first as though the very top of her finger had been cut off, and as she gave a sudden startled cry, the swinging door was thrust open and she found John Adams holding the finger under the running water, and saying: "There, Molly, sweetheart, does it hurt very much? Here, I'll bind it up with my handkerchief!"

But Molly looked at him aghast. "But what about my dinner—all my lovely dinner; I'll never be able to cook it now—"

"Let the beastly old dinner go. I'm not hungry; we'll sit out here and eat some milk and pie. You are all right, Molly?"

"And what are you doing here?" Molly demanded suddenly. "How did you come home at this time?"

But he caught her rebellious little chin and tilted it back and kissed her squarely on the lips.

"What does it all matter, when I have you—"

"But how—"

"Miss Porter told me two days ago what you were going to do, and I got the afternoon off to be here, and, Molly, I wonder if you know how much I love you?" he asked.

And Molly with her red-brown head against his coat didn't care if the best-laid plans sometimes go astray.

Chicago.—Laxity on the part of parents is the main cause for the present wave of juvenile crime here, in the opinion of the grand jury, which has just made public its findings.

"Parents," says the grand jury's report, "are responsible for the actions of their children. If these youthful criminals had been properly trained they would not now be committing these crimes. The trouble lies largely in the hom life. Parents have not sufficiently concerned themselves in the development of proper character in their boys."

In the opinion of the jury, children should be at home at 9 o'clock at night unless "there is a proper reason for being out."

"Groups of boys get together on street corners and plan holdups and other crimes," the report says. "These crimes are hatched in the late hours of night, when their youthful perpetrators ought to be in bed."

TEMPLES IN DEEP JUNGLES

Burmese Buildings So Ancient They Seem to Have Been Forgotten by Father Time.

In the heart of the jungle in Burma, where the tiger and the lizard keep guard, and herds of wild elephants roam smashing through the undergrowth you sometimes come upon sights that make you doubt you are on earth. You may break through cordons of vine and thorn and stumble upon crumbling temples, ancient of days, so ancient—as time goes in the moist tropics—that neighboring villagers cannot tell you who built them there nor when. Some are vegetation-covered heaps of rounded bricks; some preserve the changeless traditional form; bell-shaped, with lofty pinnacle surmounting a basal tower—tottering, but untumbled. No trace of road may lead to them, no remains of old villages nearby.

"Old, unhappy, far-off things, and battles long ago" may have devastated their sites and driven their people like chaff before the storm. Once their spires were surmounted by glittering caps of purest gold; their corners watched over by idols of jeweled eyes and awesome mien; carving relieved their snow-white slopes—now, only romance hovers there, romance and the gray ape.—Christian Science Monitor.

Chinese Education.

In Chinese schools, just before the noonday recess, the teacher writes a sentiment, a proverb or a proposition on a slip of red paper and pastes it on the door. Each boy as he goes out reads the lines, and in the afternoon gives to the teacher another line which will, with the first, make a couplet.

FRENCH CLING TO OLD WAYS

Prejudices Hamper Work of Rebuilding Area Devastated by War.

DON'T TAKE TO NEW IDEAS

Hard to Convince Inhabitants That What Was Good Enough for Their Grandfathers is Not Good Enough for Them.

New York.—Model cities and villages will soon be springing up in the war districts of France provided the inhabitants can be convinced that what was good enough for their grandfathers is not good enough for them. There is the rub. The civic idealists, many of them Americans, who set out with a vision of model towns rising from old ruins are running up against the same quirks of human nature encountered by Sir Christopher Wren, when he tried to rebuild a London beautiful after the great fire of 1666, remarks the Literary Digest.

If left to themselves Jean and Jeanne would rebuild their homes and shops exactly as they were before German artillery reduced them to dust and tender memories. A shopkeeper fears that his customers will not find his shop unless it is the replica of its predecessor. And madam would like to have her spinning wheel set as it was when she stopped spinning in the summer of 1914.

Habits are Strong.

The habits of centuries are strong among the poilus. Nevertheless, the reconstructionists are hopeful. Outlines of plans for model towns to replace those destroyed have been appearing off and on in French and other periodicals for some time, and one of the latest projects will be tried out as an experiment, with the financial backing of an American committee. This plan was prepared under the auspices of the French organization known as La Renaissance des Cites, which is seeking to have spring up on the ruins of northern France communities which shall combine modernity with the charm that is so striking a characteristic of French towns many centuries old.

La Renaissance des Cites has already helped over 200 towns in northern France to prepare reconstruction plans. In addition, it is doing educational work of various kinds in the rest of the communities in the devastated lands—aggregating about 2,400.

In order to further the work of reconstruction, La Renaissance des Cites decided to create a model village. After studying more than 1,500 towns and villages throughout the devastated areas, it finally selected the village of Pinon, on account of its having a population typical of northern France, both from the farming and industrial points of view, and also on account of its being near Paris on direct rail and road routes, which will make it easy of access both to Frenchmen and foreign visitors.

Natives Grumble.

Pinon was completely destroyed in the war. At least one member of practically every family that lived there before the war has returned, to live in some sort of hastily built shack, waiting for the old homes to be rebuilt. At first most of the natives did not favor the idea of having Pinon used as a model village, but after long discussions they decided to let La Renaissance des Cites create one for them. The general plans were drawn up by Charles Abella, a winner of the much coveted Prix de Rome in architecture. An American committee has been formed to get funds from the United States to be expended in the reconstruction of Pinon. This committee has representatives in many large American cities. The committee plans to turn over to the French organization an amount sufficient not only to rebuild one devastated town, but to provide a number of homeless war victims with permanent shelter.

The planners continue with their work, but some of the old natives are reluctant to take up these "newfangled fads."

REDS COURT ORIENT

Soviet Russia Pushing Friendship With Near East.

Lenin Exchanges Presents With Asiatic Rulers as Did Monarchs of Ancient Days.

Riga, Latvia.—Recent arrivals from Moscow declare that the world little realizes how closely soviet Russia is pushing its friendship with the Near East.

In Moscow the Turkish legation occupies one of the most sumptuous of the old palaces and the personnel, garbed in faultless European clothes, present a strange contrast to the poorly garbed Muscovites. The Afghans and other Near East delegations also occupy luxurious quarters, give elaborate banquets and otherwise carry on with all the pomp of the old eastern courts. Members of Premier Lenin's government are frequently guests at these affairs and entertain the legation members equally lavishly in return.

Besides this, M. Lenin has so accommodated himself to the psychology of the East that he now exchanges presents with the rulers of Turkey, Persia, etc., as did the rulers of ancient days.

A Moscow dispatch today reads like a paragraph from what might have been an ancient tablet of hierogliphics describing the visit of a Babylonian envoy to King Cyrus of Persia. It runs:

"The representative of the soviet government has made his first official visit to the shah of Persia, presenting to the shah on a golden salver an album with photographs of soviet leaders of the whole of Russia as a personal present to the shah from Lenin."

A man who recently arrived from Moscow said:

"Few persons realize what a close connection now exists between Russia and its old enemy, Turkey, and for that matter all of the Near East. M. Lenin is accomplishing here what the old Russian government could not do by playing up to eastern psychology.

"The so-called bolshevism in these eastern countries is nothing at all like the bolshevism of Moscow, but in each case the Russian agitators have a distinct brand of propaganda designed to dovetail with ancient customs of the country in question. For instance, in regions where the trade in bazaars is a century-old custom, no agitation against free trade has been made."

Joy, the four-year-old son of one of our friends in Chicago, while standing in the back yard watching the approaching storm, was struck by one of the big drops of rain, and putting his hand on his head, he said, "Papa, I feel a piece of wet on my head."

Little Marjorie had been watching the rain and was anxious to get outside as soon as the rain ceased. She was not careful how she was stepping and the walk was slippery. After she had fallen down and her clothes were all wet she both looked and felt sad. For some time she was very quiet, and then going to her older sister, she said, "When you pray to Jesus up in the sky, please tell Him I don't like rain."

A little seven-year-old boy, whose father and mother had both died with tuberculosis, and whose grandmother had taken care of him for several years since their death, had now lost the grandmother. He was very sad one day, and when asked what was the matter, he said I did not sleep last night; then he was asked why. He said I was thinking. What were you thinking about? I was thinking how selfish God is; He took my father and mother and now He has taken my grandmother, and I have nobody to take care of me.

A Loving Cup

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mrs. Gleeson sat down with a bang. Few women are equal to that, but she was, at many points, out of common. Whatever she did gave an impression of noise and finality. Her husband was certainly of those classed as ciphers on the wrong side of significant figures.

She was tired—dead tired—yet sat bolt upright, going on with the knitting that had occupied her fingers while she made the tour of orchard, garden and barnyard. She had found them, each and several, deserted. That was sufficiently aggravating, but not quite the worst. The Benton boy had fetched a scrawl from her absent husband: "Caught on jury—dunno when I'll be home." Considering that it was mid-October and fine sunshiny weather, with a slue of hard work accumulating, it is plain the lady had reason to be angry.

Now, to be very angry and have nobody to quarrel with, breeds a parlous state of mind. Had Jimmy Rand known the situation he would have realized the fact and waited. Instead he burst in, the incarnation of happy love, crying joyously: "Miss Sue, Nan says Yes, and Granny says Yes—now you make it unanimous—we both know good old Pete don't count."

"Indeed! Who says so?" Mrs. Gleeson asked in her most blatant voice. It ought to have warned Jimmy—but he was fairly drunken with happiness, so only giggled: "Why, nobody! I found that out by my lone self about the day I cut eye teeth."

"So. Well, you're due to find out something else," Mrs. Gleeson snapped. "It is that we'd rather see our Nancy dead than married to a horse jockey and a gambler—Stephen and me."

"As I'm neither, that has nothing to do with the case," Jimmy flung back, flushing deeply.

"No. With everything you've got on four hoofs showing at that fool county fair—and you yourself to ride there for money this afternoon?" Mrs. Gleeson blazed out.

"And you the kingpin of it all! That's the reason everybody's work is going undone—so you shiftless, thriftless wasters can have your sport. Sport! Heavenly masters! What sport is it to turn what ought to be decent hard-working folks into an imitation circus!"

"Sorry you take it this way, Miss Sue," Jimmy said humbly, "but we'll work double turn, all of us next week—to catch up for our play-time. If only you'd go once yourself I think you'd understand—"

"When I waste time and money that way—" Mrs. Gleeson began, almost apoplectic.

"But you ought to use your exhibitor's pass—here it is," Jimmy interrupted, thrusting a card into her hand. "Don't ask how you came by it—go see for yourself. It will pay you—in several ways."

With that he dashed away, leaving her quite speechless for a minute. She flung down the card, but took it up almost instantly, pursing her lips, her eyes speculative. She began to understand certain gaps in the farm stock, the disappearance of her fine saddle mare and colt. Then Stephen's staying away all night—this was Saturday—in a flash it came to her that courts usually adjourned over the week-end, even without a fair.

She had been fooled, tricked—the farm hands had gone with the stock—Nan and Granny would be there to see them, also to see Jimmy win first in the riding ring. Suddenly her molten anger turned solid—she would go and confront the tricksters—confound them before the world, and so avenge the insult she was suffering.

Around one o'clock that afternoon, black-gowned and heavily veiled, she parked her sedan far down the line, and, after securing, made her way unobtrusively through the crowd. In all her life she had never moved so easily, so silently—it amazed her to find how very smooth was such progress. Way was made for her sympathetically—beside the show ring where cattle were being judged, more than one program was offered her by friendly stranger [illegible] one of them became her ample veil she saw her own name more than once. And even as she scanned the lists the marshal shouted loudly: "General purpose cow, any breed; first prize, Mrs. Susan Gleeson."

In spite of herself she smiled, as equally in spite of herself, half an hour later, she frowned when her pet Jersey heifer, the apple of her eye, won only honorable mention. She thought she saw Stephen at the far side shaking his head, but without waiting to make sure, she slipped away to the grand stand, already fairly crowded, as the horses were coming on.

Here she had to raise her veil; however, she held it in both hands, making a shield of it for her face. A saddle ring was on—as her own Trix went by to halter, with black Moses leading her gently. The creature half turned her head and whinnied softly—not all the veils nor all the crowds could hide from her the mistress she loved so well. And at the whinny something seemed to melt within her mistress—all the rage and hate she had been cherishing became folly of the worst. She flung up her veil and leaned forward, one hand on the rail—and shed tears of joy when Trix won the blue. But to make up for that, the colt she loved even better was unplaced, partly because of bad ring manners. After that she dared not wait for the trots, the riding ring—alone as she was, she did not care to risk the crush of the late-homing crowd.

It was later than usual. Around 10 o'clock Stephen came in, his air a cross betwixt a victorious fighting cock and a man with murder in his soul. Supper; he wanted none—in fact, he had stopped to see Nan and Granny, also he wouldn't trouble her, not for the world, and he had seen to everything about the place before coming, so bed was the thing for them both and a late rising tomorrow.

"Court held mighty late, didn't it?" Mrs. Gleeson asked maliciously. Stephen looked blank, then smiled foolishly, saying, "Jurymen are the obstinatest lot." Whereat his wife smiled a twisted smile, retorting: "Same as married men, I reckon." Then trying to speak sourly: "Did that scallawag Jimmy Rand win the silver cup?"

"Why, how should I know?" Stephen asked aghast.

"Because you stayed to see," his wife countered, running on quickly. "Stephen, I ain't mad at you for but one thing. I expect you to lie to me now and then—all married men do it—but I hope they ain't quite so clumsy as you—"

"Why, Susan; how you talk," Stephen began feebly. Then he stopped short. Susan was laughing as he had not seen her laugh since the day he married her. "You—you must a been there—yet you couldn't!" he went on jerkily.

She wiped her eyes and nodded, saying: "I was there—went all by myself to spy out evil—and found nothing but good. Folks learn how to be kinder and friendlier for getting together—and nobody worse for looking at good dumb beasts. Even they seemed to feel proud of themselves. Maybe Crumple Horn wasn't set up over her blue ribbon, but I know Trix was—nearly as much as I was. Now tell me quick, did Jimmy Rand give that cup to Nancy?"

"No!" Stephen answered with a crafty smile. "You see, it's a loving cup, and they are coming tomorrow to bring it to you."

Then and there the ice truly broke up. Mrs. Gleeson felt like crying. Instead she said briskly: "After I abused him like a pickpocket. Well, I reckon this is a new sort of fire-coals to heap on my head. But I'll leave it to Nancy to pay him for it."

"Well you may," said Stephen, with a broad grin.

Vol. 5. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, August 11, 1921 No. 17

New Home Building

We give, this week a list of homes being built on the Hilltop south of Broad street. Many of them are very beautiful and add to the beauty of the Hilltop's large number of elegant homes. We believe it is safe to say that at least a hundred new homes have been built on the Hilltop this season, this being more than have been built for several years past.

Mr. W. H. Orebaugh has two six-room moderns about two-thirds finished at 182 and 186 Whitethorne. He is also putting two 6-room frames at 152 and 156 South Richardson.

Messrs. Byerly and Orebaugh have one 6-room at 490 South Warren and one at 138 South Terrace well under way.

Mr. H. G. Butler, real estate dealer, has just finished a pretty 6-room bungalow at 39 North Hague, which, together with the 40x160 lot will make a very desirable home fronting on West Broad school building.

Mr. W. H. Dohn also has recently finished his cosy bungalow near Mr. Butler's on North Hague avenue.

Mr. Roy Cline has under way a 7-room modern to be occupied by his family at 172 South Harris avenue.

Barnes Brothers have a newly finished modern on South Burgess, near Girard.

Mr. Chambers has two 6-room bungalows on South Burgess, one of which is finished.

The new 6-room bungalow at 82 South Burgess avenue is said to be the property of Mr. W. L. Dorsey.

Mr. Martin has moved into his six-room modern at 171 South Richardson.

Mr. H. A. Correll is the builder of the pretty 5-room modern at 452 S. Richardson.

A double frame, 6 rooms to the side, is nearly completed on South Terrace near Sullivant.

Mr. F. C. Fody has just completed a beautiful brick building with a five room and bath on the second floor at 122 South Terrace. The first floor will be used by himself as a grocery and meat market.

Mr. R. Newberry expects to occupy the new 4-room cottage at the corner of South Park and Fremont.

Mr. G. W. Hayslip has well under way a 7-room bungalow for his family at 2400 Plum street.

Mr. E. W. Davisson has moved his family into the new 4-room modern at 33 Belvidere.

Mr. Elmer Edwards and family expect to occupy the substantial six-room frame at 75 Belvidere.

F. and L. Bryan Co. have erected five bungalows on South Richardson avenue, two of which are now occupied.

Mr. Herman J. Kaufman is erecting a 6-room modern at 462 South Eureka, to be occupied by himself.

Mr. H. T. Carpenter is building a 6-room modern for Henry Martin at 215 South Harris.

Mr. Leroy Latham is the builder of three 6-room moderns on Whitethorne avenue, near Ong.

The Bishop Co. is building two 6-room frames on Wrexham avenue, near Doran.

A pretty 6-room bungalow at 2000 Floral avenue, is being built by Mr. Reese, who is also expecting to put another at near Belvidere on Floral.

The new business block erected by Mr. Dinsmore on Broad, near South Park, is about ready for the plasterers.

Mr. Leroy Latham is building a 6-room modern on North Ogden to be occupied by Mr. P. Lewis.

The St. John Lutheran Church on West Broad, near Hague avenue, is now nearly ready for the roof and being pushed along very rapidly.

The Hilltop Church of Christ now has the roof on and sheeting on the floor and plumbing in.

These two new churches with the two that were built last year, gives the Hilltop a fine lot of churches, which also indicates the high class of people that are building in our section of the city. Church-going and home-owning people make for good citizenship.

KOHN'S FLIGHT TO GROVEPORT

A True Three-Act Comedy

Characters

C. J. Kohn, leading man, Hilltop Undertaker.

Mrs. C. J. Kohn, leading lady, assistant to Mr. Kohn.

Life Saver, Mrs. W. F. Dulgar, proprietor Ideal Restaurant.

Villain, Herbert Deems, owner of Packard car in which the getaway was made in.

Act 1—Dining room at Kohn residence. Curtain rises at 12:15.

Kohn—How about the picnic, kid? (speaking to Mrs. K.).

Mrs. K.—Why I don't know what about it.

Kohn—Kin I go? (Kohn shows signs of nervousness.)

Mrs. K.—If you are good and get home early.

Kohn—Thanks (that's sweet of you).

Mrs. K.—A little of that goes a long ways.

Kohn—Got anything to eat? You know my capacity.

Mrs. K.—You poor fish, wait until the last minute to decide to go, and expect a full basket of grubb. It's up to you to get your own lunch now.

Kohn—Well I kin do it.

Curtain drops on first act as Kohn starts out in search for something to eat. Five minutes' recess to shift scenes.

Act 2.—Curtain rises at 12:25. You seen Kohn entering Dulgar's restaurant, Broad and Wheatland, excited (beyond explanation).

Kohn to Mrs. Dulgar—I have just decided with the West Gate Lodge of Masons, for their annual picnic, and I want a nice lunch packed.

Mrs. Dulgar—Well, Mr. Kohn, we make a special picnic lunch for 60c, packed in a special air-tight box with a tag on it for identification in case of loss of box.

Kohn—Naw! I don't want all that fancy mess. I havn't got time to wait; just fix me up four fried egg sandwiches well done and a box of Nabiscos, and hurry. A nervous sweat breaks out on Kohn while waiting. The lunch all packed and handed to Kohn, he reaches for the money and, to his surprise, does not have a cent with him. How much is it? 65c the reply. Say, you know I changed pants this morning, and forgot to change my pocketbook, and I haven't any money to pay you.

Mrs. Dulger, trying to keep a straight face, replies: Well, we do not do a credit business here, but you can pay me later.

Kohn starts for home, lunch under his arm. End of Act 2.

Act 3.—Curtain rises as we see Kohn entering the undertaking parlors with his lunch.

Well, I am all ready kid.

I am glad to hear it, replies Mrs. K. Just then the phone rings. Kohn's pulse starts beating at about 79% degrees feeling sure some one had died. Luck was with him; it happened to be Herbert Deems notifying Kohn not to pack a lunch, as he would be provided for. As he departs in such a hurry, we see the four fried egg sandwiches and box of Nabiscos minus fruit for desert on the office desk for Mrs. Kohn to enjoy for supper.

As to how they got there and how the day ended we do not know. At a late hour Saturday he had not returned home.

The orchestra will now play Home, Sweet Home.

MILLIONS SPENT IN VIENNA

Money So Plentiful in Austria Americans Are Outbid for Objets d'Art.

Vienna, Austria.—The astounding amount of ready money circulating in Austria was illustrated by the recently concluded sale of the rare furnishings of Kiessheim palace, one of the residences of the Archduke Ludwig Victor. It netted many million crowns and the newspapers say the purchasers were virtually all newly rich Viennese.

Many professional collectors and buyers from France, Great Britain and the United States came here for the sale but declared they could not compete with native bidders, who ran prices up into millions as nonchalantly as if bidding in hundreds. Dollars, pounds and francs, they said, were out of the running. Several rare Gobelins brought from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 crowns each.

The Vienna Derby just run was another illustration of the money plenitude. About 30,000 persons attended, and the receipts of the betting machines alone was 4,500,000 crowns.

BLAZING CROW FIRES FIELD

Bird Killed by a Live Wire Falls into Hay Causing Loss of Several Hundred Dollars.

Rochester, N. Y.—A crow alighted on a heavily charged electric wire of the Niagara Power company and was instantly killed, falling a blazing mass into a field of uncut hay belonging to Hobart Stahl, near Spencerport, eight miles from here.

The field caught fire, causing a loss of several hundred dollars, and for a time threatened adjoining wheat fields whose uncut crops are estimated to be worth several thousands.

The Spencerport Chemical company made the three-mile run to the Stahl place and prevented further damage.

Meteor Falls in Tennessee.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—A meteor weighing between 500 and 600 pounds fell near here. The meteor made a swishing noise that was heard several blocks. It buried itself in the ground.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Dulgar will leave Sunday for Atlantic City and other eastern points. They expect to be absent two weeks. During their absence Mr. Francis will look after the business of the Ideal Confectionery, and will take care of all the daily and Sunday papers from both Columbus and outside cities.

On Tuesday afternoon, August 2, Miss Doris May Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Stewart of 99 S. Ogden Ave., entertained the Ladies' Aid Society of the Pleasantville Lutheran Church at the home of Mrs. J. A. Fridley of Rose Hill Farm near Pleasantville. Miss Stewart gave the entire program consisting of six piano numbers, four recitations and three songs. She was well received and won the admiration of all for the splendid program she gave them. Miss Stewart is a piano student of Walter L. King and she studies elocution under Miss Anna Lee Johnson.

M. Herschel Ferguson of 2302 Palmetto avenue returned Sunday from a two weeks' vacation, having spent several days at the home of an uncle, Rev. Milton R. Crabbe, at Junction City, and several days with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Allen D. Crabbe, near Springfield. Part of the vacation was also spent with friends at Buckeye Lake and Newark.

The girls of The R. L. Dollings Co., gave a luncheon at the Deshler last Friday in honor of May Niles of 300 Midland Ave., who is leaving for New York to enter the Office Training School of the Salvation Army. Among those present were, Cora Plant, Mrs. J. H. Wyman and May Niles of the Hilltop.

LANCASTER CAMP GROUNDS

The recent heavy rains have left the grass and the beautiful stately trees of the old camp such a green green that it delights the eye and soul.

The swimming pool, games, and amusements, etc., seem more generally partonized than the occasional prayer service and sermon, but we have had some fine sermons and lectures, music, etc.

Hon. W. J. Bryan was at his best. Mrs. Dr. Mary Stevens gave a most wonderful, eloquent and entertaining lecture on the Holy Land, and Oriental customs. She has visited Palestine many times, and was dressed in a costume of heavy silk of many colors.

We are looking eagerly forward to the coming of Dr. Carmine on the 6th, when camp meeting proper will begin. He is said to be both eloquent and spiritual.

The League Convention was quite a success and our own Glenwood won the stunt prize and quite a number of our League the greater honor of carrying home certificates for diligent class work.

The nights are so cool that extra blankets are in demand. The Book Concern seems doing a good business.

I am meeting many old Southern Ohio friends and see so many of the Glenwood people that I feel quite at home. The addresses of W. C. T. U. women rang with notes of victory and praise. Mrs. Vistia D. Romans outdid even her own eloquent self. Cottages are mostly open, many whole families enjoying together the outdoor life.

IT'S ALL UP TO YOU, KING!

Blunt but Well Meaning American Invites Royalty to Join Rotaries.

London.—The reputation which Americans have of blunt speaking even in the face of royalty is likely to be enhanced by a remark that passed between King George and Mr. Klumph of Cleveland, O., on the occasion of the Rotarians' reception at Buckingham palace the other day.

King George affably said to Mr. Klumph that he, too, would like to become a Rotarian.

"I don't see what is to stop you" said Mr. Klumph.

Surgeons Sew Up Cut Inch Long in Heart

New York.—Four stitches were taken in the heart of Frank Farino, sixteen, stabbed accidentally. The wound was an inch long. After the operation, performed through an opening made between two ribs, Farino asked to sit up. Doctors are hopeful for his recovery. The operation required 35 minutes, stitches being taken only when the heart was contracted. Dr. James M. Downer and Dr. Geroge Doyle performed the operation, said to be the first of its kind.

Combine Slips Yellow Men Into Florida by Way of Cuba.

Few Places Where Schooners Cannot Make Easy Landing on Coastline of Southern State.

Tampa, Fla.—Chinese are being smuggled into the United States on a large scale by way of Cuba and Florida, according to reports from the South. Unless prompt action is taken by authorities at Washington, conditions will soon be as bad in the southern states as they were on the Mexican border, where it took five years to stamp out the smuggling of the yellow men, says Immigration Inspector Whalen of Tampa, Fla., in whose district much of the smuggling has been going on.

"We have learned that within the past few months almost 75,000 Chinese have been landed in Cuba," says Whalen. "According to the statements we got from some of the smuggling parties that we have rounded up, these Chinese remain in Cuba only long enough to make arrangements with the smugglers to be landed on the Florida coast.

"The fact that all the Chinese who have been arrested in this vicinity are plentifully supplied with money and are able to obtain unlimited funds to defray court expenses indicates that there is a well-organized smuggling combine at work."

The latest arrests in the smuggling war were in Charleston, S. C., where four Chinese were picked up, with railroad tickets from Clearwater, Fla., a short distance from Tampa, to Washington, D. C. Six more were arrested the same day at Dunedan, Fla., also near Tampa. These six were taken when they tried to buy railroad tickets to Washington.

The coast of Florida is an ideal place for smuggling operations as there are only a few places along the entire 1,400 miles of coast line where schooners cannot make an easy landing.

LIVING AS IN STONE AGE

Natives of Isolated South Sea Isle Found by Missionary Number Only 500.

London, England.—People who still live in the manner of the stone age are found on Rennel island in the Solomon group, Melanesia, according to Dr. Northcote Deck, a missionary who says there are only about 500 inhabitants, and because of their isolation even their dialect there has never been studied.

The natives had implements and weapons of stone and wood only when Dr. Deck first visited the island. They showed great eagerness to barter homemade articles for anything made of iron.

"They seem to feel keenly the monotony of their isolation, and showed a settled melancholy, both in their faces and the cadence of their voices," says Dr. Deck.

The teeth of flying foxes which swarm in caves on the island seem to be the only form of currency known there.

DIAMOND 8 YEARS IN GARDEN

Ring Lost by New Jersey Woman Found and Restored by Present Tenant.

Glen Ridge, N. J.—Exactly eight years to the day after she had lost a diamond ring in the garden of her home the lost bit of jewelry was restored to the owner. Subsequent to losing the ring Mrs. Smith removed from 61 Hillside place and her former home was occupied by John Townsend.

For three years Mr. Townsend has been planting the garden, and while hoeing lima beans this week he saw what he thought was a bit of glass shining on the ground. He picked up the object and it proved to be a diamond ring. Meeting Mrs. Smith he mentioned having found the ring. Its loss was explained and the ring was restored to its owner.

BACHELOR SEA LIONS TO DIE

United States Government Asks Bids for Killing of Lighthouse Annoyers.

San Francisco.—Because 100 bachelor sea lions on Anno Nuevo island, 20 miles north of Santa Cruz, clutter up the walks around the lighthouse, steal food from the back porch of the lighthouse keeper's cottage and have a smeaking desire to take up their residence in the front parlor, the United States lighthouse service will open bids for shooting the obnoxious bachelors.

There are 400 more sea lions on the island, but as they consist of thoroughly trained husbands with their harems of wives, they have their own social sets and don't bother the lighthouse keeper. The bachelors' skins are good for leather, their blubber contains good oil and the rest of their carcasses can be sold for fertilizer.

Parrot Saved Friend From Going to Jail

When Mr. and Mrs. Paul Johnson of Chicago went away for a brief vacation, Mrs. Johnson asked Edward Peterson, her brother, to go to the flat and water and feed the canaries and parrot. Peterson lost the key and was climbing in the window when neighbors called the police. The desk sergeant laughed at his explanation, but the boy insisted that if the sergeant would accompany him to the flat he would prove he was all right. So they went back.

"Hello, Polly," said Peterson.

Hello, Ed," replied the bird. "How's the boy? Whatcha got on yer hip?"

The sergeant allowed Peterson his liberty.

HOPE TO COME BACK

Deported Radicals Are Fleeing From Soviet Rule.

Reported to Be Greatly Disappointed at What They Found in the "Promised Land."

Riga, Latvia.—Litte groups of Russian-Americans, who were deported or volunteered to go from America to soviet Russia, are trickling back across the Latvian frontier from the land of the Bolsheviki very frequently these days. All hope to get back to the United States.

These emigrants, according to American consular officials, who hear their stories and have to tell them there is not much chance for them to get back, are greatly disappointed with what they found in the "promised land."

They tell of starvation and long rides in trains so packed with people that there is scarcely room to breathe.

Besides those who have succeeded in getting to Latvia, there are many others who have written friends in Riga asking for money from America.

The Moscow correspondent of the Riga Rundschau writes as follows about the Russian-Americans inside the country:

"The numbers of Russian communists expelled from America, who with wry faces are selling their last goods and chattels on the Moscow market places, are increasing every day.

"The soviet government is doing its utmost to keep these people above water by giving them even whole factories to run and manage. But as these factories are very much run down, even American spirit and energy is not sufficiently strong to set them in operation.

"A little better off are those of the immigrants who have managed to take with them from America their tools or goods produced by their trade. Such people are doing a big business and can afford to live well. Thus, one party of emigrants has succeeded in installing a small sewing factory containing about 300 sewing machines.

"Formerly the soviet government simply would have confiscated this lucrative enterprise, but at present the government is a little wary, the more so as in this case they have to do with immigrants whom they make a point of treating with the greatest possible courtesy and consideration.

"Quite recently there arrived a party of Americans whose specialty is the construction of small dwelling houses. They are welcomed and aided by the soviet government."

London.—Guglielmo Marconi, who has just returned to London, announces that for the last few weeks he has been testing a new method of wireless telegraph reception whereby he was enabled to receive messages from the United States continuously without interference by static disturbances.

Sig. Marconi regards this as an advance of the greatest importance, enabling wireless service to be conducted despite atmospheric disturbances for the entire period of 24 hours, at high speed most of the time.

HAD BRIEF PERIOD OF POWER

Two Men Other Than Those Chosen by the People Have Been Country's Chief Executive.

The United States has had just one "President for a day" in John Gaillard of South Carolina—in 1821. Millard Fillmore has the distinction of having been President for two hours, until Zachary Taylor took the reins of office. His biographers erroneously claim that David A. Atchison, senator from Missouri, was "acting President" on March 4, 1849. Thomas White Ferry, senator from Michigan, in 1877, just missed being "President for a day." It was the falling of March 4 on Sunday that occasioned these makeshifts.

The official records show that twice—in 1849 and again in 1877—this country was for 24 hours without a legally qualified person to perform the services of President of the United States. It is a matter of history that President-elect Taylor did not arrive in Washington until the morning of March 5, but fortunately nothing happened to call for the speedy action of a chief executive. Senator Ferry's term ended with that of Grant on March 3, 1877, and he was not sworn in again until March 5, otherwise he might have shared honors with Senator Gaillard. As it was, the United States was again without a head for 24 hours.

Her Model Youngster.

A new neighbor called on me the other day for the first time. Among other things I was telling her what a fine boy I had, when suddenly the bell rang, and there stood a policeman, holding my youngster by the ear, informing me in the worst voice imaginable that he had tied a tin can to a cat's tail, which caused the cat to spring through the basement window, consequently breaking it. The officer demanded I pay $2.50 for the same.—Chicago American.

The Good Morning Man

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Dash, dash, dot, pause, dash, dash.

It was a gloomy, rainy morning, and Stella Clark had been in anything but a cheerful frame of mind when she opened the telegraph office a few minutes before, set the umbrella in a back room, where it could dry, shed her light coat and her hat, gave her business-like knob of black hair a pat or two, and prepared for business.

She had felt like joining the clouds in a good cry, for a rainy day seemed to have a more dampening effect on Stella than on the average person. Perhaps it was because her only love affair terminated on such a day four years ago, when Glen Hartlow went away angry after a furious quarrel and never came back. And Stella would have been willing to give her life to Glen, although she would not yield to him in an argument that arose from a misunderstanding at a dance; hence the quarrel and the parting. It happened in a distant state.

There was little excitement in Stella's life as manager and chief operator of the telegraph office in this small resort city. There was plenty of work in the summer, and she had an assistant then, but in the fall things were pretty quiet. She was sitting at an instrument table waiting for things to happen when she took note of that message in the language of Morse:

Dash, dash, dot, pause, dash dash.

The sounds meant "G. M." which stood for "good morning."

"I can't say that it is, but I like his spirit, and I also rather fancy the firm, clear, decisive manner in which he handles the key. Wouldn't he make a wonderful husband? You don't find many operators to send out a good-morning greeting along the wire. He must be a new one. I believe I'll answer him; no one else is going to, I guess."

Stella opened a key and clicked off this message:

"Good morning yourself, in spite of the rain. Perhaps it isn't raining in your town."

"It isn't," was the quick answer. "It's just a flood here, that's all, lady."

Ah, he had detected the feminine in those clicks she sent over the wire. In addition to his other qualities this man had a keen brain.

She was trying to think of something to say when he resumed:

"Of course it had to rain today because I just arrived in town last night. That makes you like a place right at the start. This is Center City, and I'm the new operator. Well, here's a message for a place named Carson. I suppose I'll have to send the regular call and wake somebody up."

"No need," Stella telegraphed. "This is Carson. Let it come."

He sent rapidly, but he was easier to read than many slower senders, because his touch was almost perfect. Stella became quite fascinated with that touch and with the man who possessed it, before the day was over; for it happened Center City has a great deal of business with Carson during the ten hours the Carson office kept open.

The next morning the same greeting was flashed at large by the same man, and again Stella was the only one to answer. Again pleasantries were exchanged before the daily grind got under way.

Before that week was over Stella had lost her heart to the "good morning" operator. From this it must not be supposed that Stella was one of the kind that carry their hearts on their sleeves, or, in this case, on the finger tips. Stella was good to look upon, and many men had courted her, but four years ago she told a certain man that she would never care for another, and up until now she had remained faithful to that statement, even though the one to whom she had made it was no longer a part of her life. Men of wealth and power, and handsome men, had wooed her in vain, and now she was in love with a strange person who popped over her horizon suddenly with a "good morning" and forced his way into her affections without even showing his countenance.

It was no passing fancy, she was certain. Stella was quick to make decisions, but they were lasting. She believed in love at first sight because that was the way she gave her heart to Glen, and she could see no reason why love at first sound could not be as sincere. The sense of hearing is as discriminating as the sense of sight, she argued in defense of her attitude toward the Center City operator. Of course, the affair probably would come to naught, she thought, for probably the "good morning" man was already married, and, anyhow, it was unlikely he would return her affection. However, she felt that he would do much to dissipate her loneliness, for Stella was alone in the world, her mother having died two years ago, and she resided all by herself in a little upstairs flat.

Stella came to look forward to that cheery Morse "good morning," and one day, about two weeks after she first heard the greetings, she was greatly disappointed when it was not flashed over the wire. During the day she learned that her telegraphic sweetheart had gone away—"probably to visit his wife," she told herself bitterly.

For two days she was morose, but on the third "good morning" came in the firm, clear tones shortly after she entered the office, and she smiled again.

"Missed you," she told him, taking care to make it sound more or less perfunctory.

"Went to Chicago to pack up," he explained. "I'm moving here."

Stella sighed a deep sigh of relief and her smile became brighter.

That week was a happy one, for the Center City operator showed signs of caring. Little personal remarks that he edged in between business matters during the day made Stella joyful. The remarks were not familiar in an objectionable sense, but they were intimate, in a conservative, apparently sincere way. She wondered what the other operators on the wire thought of it, but she didn't really care.

Then came the climax to the affair. She was just ready to close up for the evening when the "good morning" man called her.

"This is strictly business," he said. "I'm in love, and you're the one. I can't wait any longer. Will you marry me?"

Stella was dazed. It was really "so sudden," but she was a business woman, and he had stated this was strictly business. So she answered with the expression that so often traverses telegraph wires, where every letter means time:

Dot, space, dot, pause, dash, dot, dash.

It was simply "O. K."

"Good morning" was missing the next day, but there was a reason. The man was on his way to Carson, and Stella's heart was fluttering expectantly.

In the middle of the afternoon a young man entered the office and advanced to the counter. When he and Stella saw each other they both became paralyzed with astonishment for several long seconds.

"Glen!" she finally managed to gasp. "Why—what—where—"

He smiled.

"I guess," he said, "that I have come to marry you."

She cast her eyes to the floor.

"You're too late," she murmured. "I'm already engaged—to the telegraph operator at Center City. But how did you know I was living in this town?"

He continued to smile.

"I didn't," he confessed, "until just now. I came to wed the manager of this telegraph office, but I didn't know it was you. I'm the Center City operator, you see. But I'm not going back on my bargain now; in fact, I'm more willing than before. How about you?"

As remarked before, Stella was a business woman.

"I never break my word," she said, "and I told you O. K."

Find Fossilized Bones of Prehistoric Animal

The Pas, Man.—Discovery of what he believes to be the fossilized remains of a huge prehistoric animal in the Pasquai hills, near here, was reported by Dr. Ells of the Dominion geological department. He said he found the bones disconnected, but in alignment, and that they measured 940 feet in length. He was unable to say what class of animal the remains belonged to. Eighty pounds of bones were brought here by Dr. Ells for shipment to Ottawa.

FACE FAMINE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Doctor Grenfell, "Angel of Labrador," Issues Appeal for Relief of Fisherfolk.

DREAD APPROACH OF WINTER

Hunger and Companion Miseries of Poverty Are Acute Because the Fishermen Have Been Unable to Sell Product of Labor.

New York.—Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, "angel of Labrador," has joined forces with William Willard Howard, and the Christian Work of New York, in the campaign to relieve destitution in Newfoundland by providing a market for the codfish upon which thousands in that country depend for livelihood.

Hunger and companion miseries of poverty are acute in Newfoundland because the fishermen have been unable to sell the product of their labor. Dr. Grenfell came to New York a few days ago from Labrador whither he had gone after a conference here with Mr. Howard, director of the Newfoundland relief work, and Dr. Frederick Lynch, treasurer of the fund.

Fisherfolk on Verge of Famine.

Dr. Grenfell reported finding deplorable conditions among the families of the fishermen, and the industry of the country in a truly sad state. He says: "I have just received a message from Mr. Ed Grant of Blanc Sablon, Labrador, asking if I can help there, as 'great destitution prevails.' I am afraid that it will be very serious by winter. I sent him a couple of hundred dollars to fit out some few fishermen.

"At Twillingate only one-half of the normal number of fishermen are being fitted out. The savings are being drawn steadily from most of the banks, both in the outports and in St. Johns. I have that on the evidence of the bankers. We are starting the new hospital building at Twillingate. That is a help."

Doctor Grenfell is planning to tour through Newfoundland on his relief mission.

Mr. Howard, discussing the discouraging reports from Labrador, commented:

"Twillingate is the largest and most prosperous place in Newfoundland outside of St. Johns. If Twillingate can fit out only half her fishermen for the season's fishing, it is a black outlook for the rest of the island. Blanc Sablon is an important fishing port at the entrance to the straits of Belle Isle.

Foresees Severe Winter.

"If destitution prevails there now, I hesitate to think what Doctor Grenfell will find as he goes north.

"Much of the destitution could be relieved if one of my ships could leave for the Labrador coast now filled to the deck beams with flour, vegetables, molasses and fishery salt. A dollar of help now would be worth $10 in next winter's inevitable famine.

"Soon the suffering people are hemmed in by ice."

The committee is now engaged in a program of relief which will aid the starving Newfoundlanders and at the same time provide food for families made homeless and suffering in this country on account of the Colorado flood. It is offering the fish for sale for $10 for a 100-pound box, and purchasers who do not want fish for their own use may direct that it be sent to the Colorado refugees. Thus food will go to hungry Americans and the money which pays for it will go to the Newfoundland fishermen.

JUGOSLAVIA'S ARMY COSTLY

War Department Is to Take Half of Total Government Budget for Next Year.

Belgrade, Jugoslavia.—The war department of the new kingdom of Jugoslavia will cost 2,000,000,000 dinars, one-half the government's total budget, in the next fiscal year, despite vigorous efforts by the minister of finance to reduce expenses. This is a reduction of 500,000,000 dinars from the estimates asked for by the war ministry.

The total budget estimates were 6,000,000,000 dinars but this has been reduced to 4,000,000,000. The nominal exchange value of a dinar is about 19 cents but at the present rate it is worth about three cents.

RANKS OF G. A. R. FAST THINNING

Drop of 10,103 in Number of Veterans of Civil War in the Past Year.

4,745 POSTS IN 48 STATES

Ohio Has the Largest Quota, With Pennsylvania Second and New York Third—Organized in Illinois in Spring of 1866.

Indianapolis.—When the Grand Army of the Republic holds its annual reunion this year more than 10,000 of the Civil war veterans who attended the encampment of 1920 will be counted among the missing, as the ranks have been depleted to this extent through the last year.

The total membership of the G. A. R. today is 98,155, while its membership in 1920 was 108,258.

The total membership is scattered among 4,445 posts in every state. Ohio, with 10,641, has the largest membership, with Pennsylvania second with 9,122; New York third, 8,795; Illinois fourth, 6,868; Indiana fifth, 5,949; Massachusetts sixth, 5,350. No other state has 5,000 or more members.

Property owned by all posts is valued at $2,075,027, including real estate worth $902,841.

Members in the old Confederate states total approximately 2,200.

The G. A. R. was organized in Illinois in the spring of 1866. Who its originators were is a matter of tradition, rather than of record, says the report made to the national encampment in 1869 by N. P. Chipman, then adjutant general of the national organization.

First Post in 1866.

"There can be no doubt that the late Col. B. F. Stephenson of Decatur, Ill., was one of the prime movers," says Chipman's report. "Being recognized as such, he organized the first post at Decatur, Ill."

By July, 1866, there were 40 posts in Illinois, representatives of which met in convention and organized the state department. Stephenson was by common consent the provisional commander in chief, and posts were organized in other states, resulting in the first national encampment being held at Indianapolis, November 20, 1866. After the Indianapolis convention Chipman records that "posts seem to have sprung up as if by magic in all parts of the North," but he adds there was no record of progress. Ten states were represented at the Indianapolis encampment, 21 states in 1867, 24 in 1868, 37 in 1869—having 2,060 posts.

At the 1869 encampment a mutual life insurance scheme was proposed, it being said that the G. A. R. had 290,000 members. In 1867 it had been said that the state departments "claimed to represent a constituency of over 200,000." But there is no authentic record of the number for the early years, the insurance proposal, containing an estimate, it is thought, and the 1867 estimate being regarded as the number of Union soldiers living in the jurisdiction of the state departments represented at the convention. For instance, the adjutant general's report at the 1870 encampment, when there were 39 departments, says it is "absolutely impossible for me to furnish anything like a correct report of the present membership."

Decline Constant Since 1890.

In 1890, however, reports taken as authentic state that the membership was 409,489, the highest mark recorded. From 1878 to 1890 the growth was rapid, being from 12,000 to 5,000 annually. Since 1890 the decline has been constant except for a 3,000 gain in 1906, said to be due to prospects of favorable pension legislation. Subsequent enrollment figures from the time the G. A. R. reached its zenith to the present time follow:

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1891 | 407,731 | 1901 | 269,807 | 1911 | 167,410 |

| 1900 | 276,612 | 1910 | 213,901 | 1920 | 108,258 |

The 1920 national encampment voted to meet every year as long as a single member survived. Brig. Gen. John L. Clem, address Army and Navy Club, Washington, D. C., claims himself the youngest G. A. R. member. He is thought by the G. A. R. officials here to be seventy-one years old, having enlisted as a drummer boy at the age of eleven years. The question of who is the oldest member always brings up hundreds of claimants and no reliable record has been obtained.

HALT FIREMEN AT BORDER

Italians Refuse to Allow Austrian Brigade to Cross Line—Forced to Watch Buildings Burn.

Vienna.—Frontier restrictions were carried to an extreme when they prevented an Austrian fire brigade from crossing the Italian border to fight a blaze.

Some buildings on the Italian side of the Brenner Pass railway station caught fire and the Austrian town's firemen turned out. Italian gendarmes demanded their visas and having none they were forced to watch the warehouses burn.

Aged Women Voters Posted; Riot Followed

It was only 90 in the shade when the assessors of North Brookfield, Mass., posted the list of 900 female voters in the town, but it was estimated to be 120 in the assessors' office next day when it became known each name was followed by the age of the voter. Not satisfied with storming the assessor's office, many of the women attacked the lists with erasers and some of the lists were torn off during the rioting. The list was accepted as authority for settling many long-standing arguments as to age.

IN MEMORIAM

Luther C. Ball, November 24, 1908-August 17, 1920; son of Mont and Hattie Ball.

One less at home!
The channel circle broken: a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place;
But, cleansed and saved and perfected by grace,
One more in Heaven!

One less at home!
One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word spoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more—
One more in Heaven!

One less at home!
A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within a place unfilled and desolate;
And far away, our coming to wait,
One more in Heaven!

One less at home!
Chill as the earth form must the thought would rise,
And wraps our footsteps round and dim our eyes,
But the bright sunbeam darteth from the skies—
One more in Heaven!

One more at home!
This is not home, where, cramped in earthly mold,
Our sight of Christ is dim, our love is cold;
But there where face to face we shall behold,
Is Home and Heaven!

One less on earth!
Its pains, its sorrow, and its toil to share,
One less the pilgrim's daily cross to bear;
One more the crown of ransomed souls to wear
At home in Heaven!

One more in Heaven!
Another thought to brighten cloudy days;
Another theme for thankfulness and praise;
Another link on high our souls to raise.
To home and Heaven!

One more at home!
That home where separation cannot be;
That home where none are missed eternally;
Lord Jesus, grant us a place with Thee,
At home in Heaven!

E. G. STOCK.

FATHER, MOTHER & BROTHER.

Scientists say that there is really no such thing as sound at all, but what is called sound is vibrations. When a bell is hit it vibrates. The vibrations produce a corresponding motion in the air, which strikes on the drum of the ear, and gives the sensation of sound. Touch the bell with your finger and you stop its vibrations. The sound-waves in the air at once cease, and you hear no sound. Different vibrations cause different "sounds"—using the word in its usual sense. Musical sounds are the regular and uniform succession of vibration. Some sounds are sonorous and pleasing, others are "dead." The difference is due to the quality of the sound-originating substance. A hard and elastic substance like copper or iron will give vibrations which come to the ear pleasantly. Lead, which is not hard nor elastic, the sound produced is non-sonorous. A cracked or split bell gives a disagreeable non-musical sound, because the crack causes a double vibration. The sound-waves clash and jar, impede each other's motion, and so produce, when they reach the drum of the ear, a discordant sound. Slow vibrations produce bass or deep sounds. Quick vibrations produce treble or shrill sounds.

With full appreciation of the beauty, and recognition of the majestic size of the giant cypress of Mexico, exception must be taken to the supposition that it is the "oldest tree in the world." The honor of being the "oldest living thing" belongs to the General Sherman tree in the Sequoia national park in California.

The Mexican cypress grows to enormous size, and is believed to attain an age of 2,000 years, but it must be remembered that the General Sherman was "a lusty youth of 1,500 summers when Christ was born." Its exact age cannot be determined without counting the rings, but it is probably well in excess of 3,500 years. The General Sherman, greatest of all the celebrated Sequoias, with stupendous proportions admitting of no exaggeration, stands unassailed as the largest and oldest living thing.—American Forestry Magazine.

FINDS PERUVIAN GOLD ON ISLAND

Man Who Befriended Beggar Is Rewarded With Key to Buried Treasure.

ROMANCE IS NOT YET DEAD

Locates After Search of More Than Seven Years Gold Hidden Half Century Ago—Church Despoiled by Four Sailors.

Papeete, T. hiti.—Romance is not yet dead. Tales of buccaneering, murder on the high seas, buried gold on lonely, uninhabited islands and charts and cryptograms of hidden treasure-trove are not all inventions of imaginative minds or legends of a day which is long past.

Such a tale is that of the treasure of the island of Pinaki, whose hiding place, after a patient search of more than seven years, has at last been discovered. And now a schooner from Tahiti has been dispatched to bring away the gold.

Sailors Despoil the Peruvian Church.

A half century ago four sailors, deserters from a coastwise vessel, joined revolutionists in Peru and learned of a vast treasure of jewels, plate and ingots, the property of the church, which had been hidden in Peru to prevent it from falling into the hands of one of the warring factions. Secretly, the sailors searched for the treasure, found it concealed in a church and moved it to another hiding place on the coast.

Going to Panama, the seafarers, at night, boarded a small schooner, murdered the crew and, after putting the treasure aboard, set sail across the Pacific, intending to make some European port later to dispose of their wealth. Recalling that they had no clearance papers and probably could not enter a European port safely, they decided to hide the gold on some uninhabited island and then get it later in a vessel they would charter at Sydney, N. S. W., for trading purposes.

Across their path lay the island of Pinaki, in the Paumotu archipelago of the south seas, and at this uninhabited spot they stopped and hid their loot. One native, who observed them from a neighboring island and rowed across to see what the men from the strange schooners were doing, was killed and his tribal brothers, who crossed later, found only his empty canoe and strange markings on the trees.

Sailing on to Australia, the four scuttled their vessel a few miles from shore and, rowing to land, told of a storm at sea which opened the seams of their ship. Not all believed them, for some residents had seen the ship approaching and had witnessed its mysterious sinking. There were no police, however, in that section, and as the four looked desperate, they were permitted to strike out overland for Sydney unmolested.

Beggar Divulges Hiding Place.

In 1914, years later, a Mr. Howe was accosted on a Sydney street by an aged beggar. Howe gave the man a few shillings and was surprised to hear the man ask his name and address. Some time later Howe received an urgent summons to a Sydney hospital. There he found the beggar, who told of how he and three others had buried their treasure, had sailed on to Australia and had set out overland for Sydney. Blacks had attacked them and killed two of the sailors. The beggar and his surviving companion, Brown, tried for years to get a ship to go for the treasure, but never obtained money enough. Brown finally disappeared, and he, Killrain, had fallen into misfortune and knew his end was near. He gave Howe a map of the island, begged him to believe the story and to search for the treasure. The following day the beggar died.

Since then Howe has been searching for the treasure, and lately announced that he had found it in a shallow lagoon on Pinaki. Lately he chartered a schooner at Papeete to go to lift the gold after making a contract with the colonial government as to his rights in the matter. It is said the treasure is worth several million dollars.

IS HERMIT 33 YEARS

Man Visits City for First Time and Sees First Woman.

Swift Change Comes and He Immediately Shods His Whiskers and Buys Store Clothes.

Omaha.—Tracy Gillis, older than Brigham Young when he took his third wife, has just let his eyes first see a woman. He also has had his first remembered view of a railroad train, a street car, a daily newspaper and a fiction magazine.

Upon seeing a woman for the first time, Gillis visited a barber shop and had his long hair cut and his face shaved.

Gillis is thirty-three years old. He was born in Chicago. His mother was an actress and his father a disciple of Moody and Sankey. But for a third of a century father and son, their Bible open to the chapter which tells of John the Baptist dwelling in the wilderness, have lived alone on a western Nebraska ranch 40 miles from railroad, with no stranger stopping within its fence posts.

George Willis, the father, died recently, two years short of the fourscore and ten which he believed that had been promised to him. Tracy, the son, buried the body on the ranch and went on with his farm work. Today he came to Omaha on his pioneer journey with a load of cattle.

According to the young man's tale, the older Gillis trafficked, with his neighboring farmers only on their property and never on his own, for fear his son's ears should pick up hints of civilization. The father fled to the West with his son to save him from the dancing, singing actresses in Chicago's old Haymarket theater.

"A devil lurks on every city street corner, father taught me," Tracy Gillis said today. "He told me the sad story of my mother and warned me to avoid all sinful men."

With the money from the sale of his cattle Gillis changed his home made garments for a suit of store clothes. He also bought a safety razor, a tube of tooth paste and two silk neckties. He is willing to admit that one glimpse of the city has demoralized him. In his plans for the future, which include continued residence on his secluded farm, he mentions a wife and a course in agriculture.

ALL SOUND MERE VIBRATION

Scientific Explanation of What Might Be Called Musical and Non-Musical Noises.

Scientists say that there is really no such thing as sound at all, but what is called sound is vibrations. When a bell is hit it vibrates. The vibrations produce a corresponding motion in the air, which strikes on the drum of the ear, and gives the sensation of sound. Touch the bell with your finger and you stop its vibrations. The sound-waves in the air at once cease, and you hear no sound. Different vibrations cause different "sounds"—using the word in its usual sense. Musical sounds are the regular and uniform succession of vibration. Some sounds are sonorous and pleasing, others are "dead." The difference is due to the quality of the sound-originating substance. A hard and elastic substance like copper or iron will give vibrations which come to the ear pleasantly. From lead, which is not hard nor elastic, the sound produced is non-sonorous. A cracked or split bell gives a disagreeable non-musical sound, because the crack causes a double vibration. The sound-waves clash and jar, impede each other's motion, and so produce, when they reach the drum of the ear, a discordant sound. Slow vibrations produce bass or deep sounds. Quick vibrations produce treble or shrill sounds.

Moonfish Sea Monster.

One of the strangest of all fishes that swim the seas is the great moonfish or Opah, called in California "Mariposa." It is a broad, flat fish, almost as deep as long, with flattened sides, small, toothless mouth, and short tail with strong muscles at its base. It lives in the open seas, reaching a weight of 400 pounds, and is likely to appear on any coast, though very rarely. It has low fins, no scales, and its body colors are a rich brocade of maroon, with white spots of varying sizes, and over all a bright sheen. Its flesh is rich, tender and toothsome, but no person is likely to taste it more than once, as the fish seldom appears twice in the same place.

The one living species of moonfish is not related to any other existing fish, constituting an order by itself.

Sun Spots.

Sun spots are now thought to be a sign of the commencing debility of the dwarfed and shrunken star which we call the sun. If this idea be correct they will become more frequent and larger as ages pass, until at length our much admired orb of day is darkened and ceases to be a worth-while source of heat.

Astronomers and meteorologists are much interested in sun spots, and keep a constant watch on them.

It seems to have been proved that spotted areas of the sun have a lower temperature than the bright spots.

Untimely Approval.

"Did you enjoy Mrs. Peckton's speech last night?"

"I can't say that I did," said Mr. Peckton. "She had carefully rehearsed me so I wouldn't applaud in the wrong place, but I'm afraid I offended her."

"How was that?"

"I applauded what I thought was a particularly good point she made, and then I happened to remember that it was one I had suggested myself."

The Right Man for Molly

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mrs. Brayton was tremendously disturbed. Never since Molly's babyhood days with their anxieties attendant upon scarlet fever and measles combined had she been so exercised. For she knew that her winsome daughter, now arrived at the witching age of twenty, was facing a crisis, the outcome of which would affect Molly's entire life. Molly, in short, was about to choose a husband.

Now, some girls are not in a position to choose. They must wait and be chosen. Not so with Molly. Her long lashed eyes of a radiant blue, her sunny waves of hair, her provocative laugh had brought various applicants for her hand. But apparently only two were still in the running—Tom Hall, fairly poor, unquestionably solid, and Bates Schuyler, fairly rich, unquestionably insecure.

Some mothers would have preferred Bates. Mrs. Brayton, ranking character above prosperity alone, preferred Tom. While Molly herself—but at this point we arrive at the reason for Mrs. Brayton's disturbance. Molly apparently loved Bates. Mrs. Brayton deduced as much from a brief colloquy she had overheard. Bates had brought Molly home from the theater and Mrs. Brayton, parentally sitting up for her daughter, had unwittingly caught Bates' parting words and Molly's response as they stood together a brief moment in the hall.

"To have you say you love him, Molly, is more than any man deserves," Bates had said. And even as Mrs. Brayton's heart lost a beat she marveled that Bates, whom she considered insufferably spoiled, could speak so humbly.

"But, remember, Bates," came Molly's whisper, "nobody knows it yet, and I haven't really said 'yes'!" Then silence and the closing of the door.

With Mrs. Brayton's disappointment for herself mingled her sorrow for Tom. During the long night she pondered. By Molly's own admission she wasn't as yet irrevocably bound. Suppose it wasn't too late—suppose a removal from Bates' undeniably fascinating personality would lessen the attraction! It was worth trying.

Paused in Astonishment.

Over their toast and grapefruit the following morning Mrs. Brayton sprang her scheme. "We leave for Highland lodge this afternoon, dear," she said quite casually.

Molly, a bit of toast halfway to her mouth, paused in astonishment. Then she slipped the morsel between curving red lips. "Lovely, mother," she acquiesced. And Mrs. Brayton, braced for opposition, relaxed, relieved but surprised.

While her mother was packing, Molly said good-by to Bates over the telephone and wrote to Tom, who was away on a business trip. Three hours later she and her mother were on the train.

The letter which Molly had written found Tom in a stuffy little hotel in one of the smaller cities of a Western state. The top of his table was strewn with papers containing estimates of the project for which his firm had sent him away. He brushed them aside and bent his well-set head over the written words of the girl he had loved for twenty years—he being two years older than she. It wasn't a long letter. It wasn't literary. It had two misspelled words.

But at the end Tom paused as if he could not believe the words he saw. Then, like a released spring, he jumped to his feet, pulled out his watch, seized a timetable, swept the papers into his grip, closed it with a snap, seized his hat and was out of the door.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Brayton, in spite of an inherent dislike for platitudes, reminded herself frequently that if there was ever a case of "out of the frying-pan into the fire," she was the illustration. Bates Schuyler was bad enough, but the young man Molly annexed the third meal in the dining room at Highland lodge was a great deal worse. His having graduated from high school with Tom Hall was not in her eyes sufficient pretext for allowing him to take her daughter canoeing, rowing and walking at all hours.

"Molly," and Mrs. Brayton's tone had a ring of despair, "to go around so exclusively with this—this Penrod person doesn't seem quite fair to—to—"

"To whom, mother?" asked Molly innocently.

"To me!" said poor Mrs. Brayton—and then she had the grace to look confused at the surprise in the eyes of her daughter.

The day came when Mrs. Brayton, desperately feeling the need of assistance, decided on a bold stroke. If Molly could enjoy so greatly the companionship of a comparative stranger, her feeling for Bates could not be very deep. A word to Tom and his arrival at the right moment—again Mrs. Brayton's hopes mounted. A telegram, economically expressing the situation in ten words, went over the wires—and chased Tom for some distance across the continent.

Highland lodge was at its loveliest on the night that Tom arrived. A silver moon climbing above Highland mountain showered with radiance the lake and lawns and porch and bathed with its glow the white-clad figure which sat on the steps waiting.

Molly was waiting for Jack Penrod. But when he came Molly had vanished—vanished into the arms of a tall stranger who turned as Jack approached, then held out his hand and cried: "Jack Penrod, as I live!"

And Molly, emerging shyly, held out a slim hand, too. "Mr Penrod has helped some tedious hours pass, telling me about the things you used to do in school, Tom," she said.

Later Mrs. Brayton received the explanation which was certainly due her.

"I don't see," she complained, bewildered, "how you can love Bates Schuyler and Tom Hall at the same time, Molly!"

"Mother, what an idea!" cried Molly indignantly. "What do you mean?"

"But I overheard you tell Bates you loved him, even if you hadn't quite said 'yes,'" explained Mrs. Brayton, patiently.

For a moment Molly looked blank. Incidentally so did Tom. Then she laughed joyously. "Oh, mother, I see it all! You carted me off to this place because you heard me tell Bates, who had just asked me to marry him, that I couldn't because I loved another man, although I hadn't told him so yet."

"Well," said Mrs. Brayton, after a moment, "so much is clear. But how did Tom finally discover that you loved him? He came here because I telegraphed."

"Not altogether," smiled Tom. "When your telegram reached me I was speeding this way as fast as express trains could carry me. You see, before your telegram I received a letter from Molly in which she said—" he looked at Molly for permission to go on, and Molly, in spite of a self-conscious blush, allowed him to continue:

"'Mother is carting me off to Highland lodge and I'll marry the first man who comes to my rescue!' So I took no chances, but came at once!"

"There wasn't much chance involved!" laughed Molly. "You were the only man to whom I wrote of my predicament!"

And Mrs. Brayton, reading the look in Tom's eyes, considerately walked out of the room.

KEEP THE MACHINERY OILED

Little Things That Irritate May Be Banished From the Well-Ordered Household.

Assuredly the hundreds of little things making up everyday life rasp the family nerves. Whether they be out of order, grating and squeaking, or whether they run smoothly, well oiled by wise oversight, is up to the keeper of the house.

There is the story of Mandy to illustrate what the constant drip, drip of one small irritation can do.

"Mandy," said her mistress, "come in and see my new ouija board. Don't you want to talk to your dead husband on it?"

"Good laws, no, honey!" said Mandy, shrinking back. Then she added, with a tired sigh: "I done heah dat man talk fo' twenty yeahs. He didn't say much, jes' 'Got any money, Mandy?' but I don't wanna heah him talk no mo'!"

Worry along with the small irritations "no mo'." Use common sense; get rid of them and smile, because nature is smiling.—Boston Globe.

1/3 Less Coal—1/2 More Heat

You can save from a third to a half of your fuel and have a much warmer home than ever before if you will install a CALORIC.

The CALORIC is the remarkable furnace that heats without pipes, through only one register. It circulates heat by Nature's own method, forcing warm air up into the entire house and drawing cool air down into the furnace to be reheated and purified.

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE
The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

The CALORIC heats practically all types of homes, bungalow or three-story house, up to eighteen rooms. It keeps kitchens and back bedrooms just as comfortable and warm as the rest of the house. Also heats churches, factories, stores and other business buildings. More than 50,000 already installed.

The CALORIC can be installed in new or old houses—no cutting of walls for pipes and no interference with present system of heating. It burns coal, coke, gas, wood or lignite, and saves from one-third to one-half the fuel.

WHY THE "KEYSTONE STATE"

Two Explanations for Appellation of Which All Pennsylvanians Are Extremely Proud.

There have been several theories advanced as to the manner in which the appellation "Keystone State" was first applied to Pennsylvania. The one most generally accepted, and most dear to Pennsylvanians, is that Pennsylvania decided the great issue of American independence. This occurred at the meeting of the Continental congress at Philadelphia, July 4, 1776, when the vote of adopting the Declaration of Independence was taken by the states. Of the thirteen original states, six had already voted in the affirmative and six in the negative, but when the delegation from Pennsylvania came in, John Morton cast the deciding vote in the affirmative. Thus Pennsylvania by her vote decided the great issue, and was named the "Keystone State."

Another reason advanced is, that in constructing a bridge between Pennsylvania avenue and Georgetown, Washington, D. C., a single arch was erected of stones left from building the walls of the capitol. On the 13 "vaussoirs," or arch-stones, the names of the 13 states were engraved. The name of Pennsylvania fell in the keystone of the arch, and the state became still more widely known as the "Keystone State."

The Hero and the White Hat

By KATE EDMONDS.

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Gee, it's stupid enough around these summer places," yawned Perry Gray. "I believe I'll take the little old car out again and see if I can't blow the blues out of my disposition. Wish I was back at the office with the symphony of the ticker tape in my ears!" He sighed profoundly, sauntered around to the garage, ran his racing car out into the perfect highway and stopped. "Wonder which way I'll go—guess I'll let the wind blow me whither it will." He glanced at a weathervane and swung the car to the south, "now for an adventure—me the hero, of course, and—" He stopped open-mouthed, as a big car shot around a curve without warning, and swept on toward the hotel he had just left. The car seemed to be full of women in summery frocks and hats, but its speed prevented recognition.

As it flew past him something white and filmy floated out behind, hovered over Perry's blond head and then settled like a great white moth over his face. He was conscious of fragrance of flower gardens and perfumes of Araby, as he detached the hat from his face and surveyed the lovely creation of georgette crepe and tiny flowers. "Forget-me-nots! Lo, the poor hero—and enter the hat. Heigh ho—for romance! Take it back? Not yet!" Perry talked to himself or to his car, which he called "Lizzie."

It was such an expensive, highbred car that if you could have understood Perry's nickname for it the little gray racer would have simply reared itself on the hind axles and run over its owner in sheer disgust.

Perry raced down the mountainside and then back again, and somehow his blues vanished forever that day. But it was later in the day.

He managed to be on time for luncheon and was the first one in the hotel restaurant. There was not one girl there who ought to belong to that fluffy white hat.

His sister Nan worried him. "What's the matter Perry, child?" she mocked, "have you been lonely today?"

"Good company," he retorted.

"Who?" She was curious. Perry did know such fascinating men.

"Myself," chidly.

"Don't wonder you look grumpy," was her sisterly shot.

"Where's mother?"

"Lunching upstairs. Mrs. Ripley came today. She was tired."

"I like her. Thought she was going to bring her child," said Perry, choosing his dessert.

"She did."

"Must be a horror if she can't bring it down here to eat?"

"Perry Gray, you are too shocking!"

"Well, it's the truth. Children are too messy for words."

"Gertrude is a dear," and there was a naughty twinkle in Nan's lovely eyes.

Perry yawned. "Want to play tennis?"

"Can't—got to amuse Gertrude."

"Bother—say, Nan," in a coaxing tone. "Do you know any girl who wears a white hat?"

Nan stared. "Dozens."

"Well, this is a very white hat—I mean its extraordinarily pretty—all sorts of little blue flowers, you know—periwinkles," with mendacious exactitude. "Yes, periwinkles—little bunches of 'em—smells like a garden—honest, it does!"

"Perry! Where did you find that hat?" she gasped.

"It found me," he chuckled. "Tell me who owns it and I'll confess."

"If I don't tell you?"

"I'll find out—I'm going to marry the girl who owns it."

Nan laughed hysterically. "Suppose I told you it was worn by the Ripley infant—"

"It was?" the light died out of Perry's face. However whole as he was, he had built up a romance from the coming of the "white moth" as he called the pretty foolish hat. "Well, her mother ought to have more sense than to put such a hat on a child's head. No wonder it blew off."

They were mounting the stairs now, and at the top they met Mrs. Gray. "Have you found the hat, Nan?" she asked.

"I know where it is," said Nan, quickly and, flying past her brother, she slipped into his room and came out with the white hat perched on her pretty head.

"Did Perry find it?" asked his mother.

"Yes," admitted Perry, feeling rather flat. "Guess I'll go out and find some one to play a set with me. Do I have to see the Ripley infant?" he pleaded.

Mrs. Gray laughed. "Run along, do, Perry—you are so foolish."

Perry, in white flannels, was leaping high in the air when he saw the white hat coming across the lawn. Nan was wearing it, but Perry scarcely saw the hat or the wearer. He was looking at the other girl—such a charming slip of a girl, with red hair and hazel eyes. She wore a blue dress and a blue hat covered with little blue flowers. By the time Perry had seen all this his feet had touched the ground again, and he amazed his opponent by walking right off the court to meet his sister.

"I'm going to marry her," Perry said to himself, as Nan introduced him. "This is my brother Perry. Gertrude—you remember Gertrude Ripley, don't you, Perry."

Perry blushed as he beat over her cool little hand. "I couldn't forget," he said warmly, then he added confidentially: "Do you mind telling me what kind of flowers those are, Miss Ripley?"

She laughed and glanced at Nan. "Periwinkles."

Perry sighed. "Forget-me-nots or periwinkles—it matters not—they all mean the same thing to me!" and no one but Perry understood what he meant until their wedding day, when he told Gertrude all about it. But Gertrude didn't seem to understand what he meant, even then.

"You have talked about forget-me-nots and white hats and periwinkles," she said a little jealously, "and I don't know what you mean, Perry, dear."

Perry smiled feebly. "On the day I met you—you passed me in a carload of girls and your blue hat—your white hat blew into my face and I said I was going to marry the girl who owned the hat."

Gertrude smiled complacently, but perhaps there was a tiny twinkle in her eye. "That was mother's hat—and I wasn't in the car at all—"

"Nan said it was her hat!" cried the bewildered bridegroom.

"It was," said his lovely wife. "Mother had just given it to her. Really, Perry, mother is a widow and—"

"Hat or no hat," interrupted Perry, kissing his bride, "I'm safely married to the only girl I could ever love, and that's enough for me."

The most amusing and original newspaper ever printed was the "Muse Historique" of Jacques Loret, which for fifteen years from 1650 to 1665, was issued weekly in Paris. It was written entirely in rhyme, but undertook to cover all the local news of the week, every class of subjects being dealt with in verse, some of which is said to have been very good.

Loret was his own reporter, going about the city for news and welcomed, although doubtless sometimes feared, by all classes of society. His prolonged and excellent performance has been pronounced unique in the history of journalism.

Reading by Mrs. Anna MacDonald and a timely response of the honoree, singing of patriotic songs with Miss Thelma Hershberger at the piano and Homer Dougherty the violin as accompaniats, made the evening one of pleasure and enjoyment to the party. ### NEW DEVICE FOR HANDLING COAL

The West Side Lumber Co. has constructed this last year a Godfrey Coal Unloader, which is designed especially for handling coal in an easy manner, eliminating the breakage that was occasioned by the old way of shoveling coal over the sides of the car.

The coal now comes in hopper cars, which is dumped into a concrete pit under the railroad track and then carried by gravity to a large bucket, that carries it then to a truck or wagon, and by an automatic self-tripping arangement, dumps it when the bottom of the bucket drops to the truck or the wagon as the case may be.

This same equipment can be used for unloading coal on a large concrete platform built for that purpose.

With this new arrangement they expect to load coal much more economically and with less waste, giving the consumer coarse, lumpy coal.

Their delivery covers all of the West Side and many miles into the country districts.

People that are accustomed to hauling their own coal find this new equipment very valuable, as they are not compelled to shovel coal as in days gone by.

They invite the public to inspect this new plant, as well as the high quality of the coals at their plant.

They have been handling coal for eleven years and each year has shown a large increase in sales.

The four large trucks and five horse-drawn vehicles are constantly delivering coal, as well as lumber and building materials to all sections of the West Side.

Annual Picnic

The first annual picnic of the Hilltop Athletic Club was held August 17, at Fishinger's Bridge, being well attended notwithstanding inclement weather. Part of the afternoon was spent in games and contests. Mrs. Dr. Fox won the nail-driving contest, driving the nail in 25 licks—prize, a large box of Lowney's chocolates. Horseshoe pitching contest was won by Merriman and Seiller after some arguing over points—prize, an ice cream cone apiece.

Picnic supper was served promptly at eight o'clock and one of the finest spreads the writer ever sat down to—chicken, pie and cakes galore, with all the trimmings, Orebaugh style; beef loaf, Slater style. Some one set the plate of chicken in front of Harry Barton, and that was the last of it. When all were ready for home, he was still eating chicken. Jim LaDow wasn't far behind, either, for what he couldn't eat, he put in a basket and hid it under the table. At the finish Doc Slater brought forth a box of cigars for those caring to indulge. The question being asked, who the mayor of the Hilltop was, it was agreed that W. H. Orebaugh was, and he was crowned with a gold crown that took a tray and a king to make. Then Doc Slater was voted President of council and presented with a dressing cap. Old Reliable Dell Howard came forward with the ice cold lemonade, which all enjoyed. The rest of the evening was spent in the dance hall—the prize waltz being won by Miss Clover and Dick Jennings (Dick is all puffed up)—prizes, a box of candy and box of cigars.

The hardest fought contest of the day came next when a committee of three women had to pick the homliest man at the picnic. We all worked hard to be winner, but old foxie Orebaugh bribed the committee, and they handed him the box of El Dois cigars. For the prettiest girl, the honor fell on Hazel Rings.

The music was furnished by "Fat" Johnson's troupe of Hoodlums. Several good solos were rendered by Harry Barton, Thelma Orebaugh gave a recitation. The quartette composed of Barton brothers, Orebaugh and another gentleman, was very good. The sad part of the day was the time to go home.

The only thing left at daybreak was John Orebaugh's Ford sedan. He had became so excited that he got in someone else's machine and forgot all about his own. When he went to his garage in the morning, it just came to him that he had forgotten to park his Ford and bring it home. It was a pitiful sight to see him walking up the river road to bring back his "lizzie."

Mrs. Clifford Conn of South Oakley, kindly, sweetly and gracefully turned the electric iron loose on her hubby's trousers Monday morning so he would present a spick and span appearance when he donned them, but she forgot to kindly, sweetly and gracefully turn off the "juice" when she left to go to work at Seiller's store. Whereupon, when she entered her home for noonday luncheon she was presented with a cloud of smoke, and on investigation discovered that the iron had been faithfully "pressing" all morning; so much so that Mr. Conn was set back financially the price of a new pair of trousers.

The Priscilla Club had their outing at Olentangy Park Monday. A fine time is reported. The shoot the chutes and figure "8" seemed to be the high spots where the girls and their "dimes" parted company most frequently.

GOT WRONG "GIRL"

One Occasion When Monarch's Plans Went Wrong.

Might Be Difference of Opinion as to Whether Joke Was on Frederick or the Corporal.

Those who read history with an eye to the humorous as well as the impressive, sometimes stumble upon funny and witty happenings in which the great were forced by humble beings or by circumstance to play ludicrous parts, writes Mark Stuyvesant in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The following incident seems as though it had been designed to swamp with laughter the carefully carried-out and often cruel plans of Frederick William I. of Prussia to have a corps of giant soldiers.

It is said that Frederick's agents searched the world for giants. Haggard, to whom we are indebted for this information, tells us that Frederick paid an Irish giant, who was 7 feet high, the sum of $6,500 to enlist, a veritable fortune in those days.

But Frederick, who was miserly, disliked to pay such sums even to achieve his ambition for an army of giants. He determined to breed giants as well as to buy them. Whenever he found a tall young woman he had her married to one of his tallest soldiers. No thought of the desires of either was permitted to stand in the way of his ambition. Sometimes Frederick resorted to trickery to bring about his wish.

One day when Frederick was riding in a forest, he came upon a beautiful girl about 6 feet in height. She did not know the king by sight. This Frederick realized when he stopped to talk with her. He well knew the girl could not read, for very few women of his day, even of the highest rank, possessed this accomplishment. So Frederick asked the girl if she would like to earn a thaler or two by carrying a note to the commander of a near-by fortress. She said she would like to have the money. So Frederick wrote a note. It read:

"Instantly have the bearer of this married to Corp. Fritz of the Grenadiers."

The unsuspecting girl took the note and left the king, who continued his way in the opposite direction. Suddenly the girl realized that if she did the errand she would be late to an appointment with her lover. So she hurried to the hut of a withered old woman, gave her half the king's money and the note to deliver. Then this beautiful, stately girl hurried away to meet the man she loved.

When Frederick rode into the fortress that evening, he commanded the woman who had borne the note to be brought before him with her husband. Imagine the shock to the king when he saw the withered old woman, who had been married to the corporal!

Needless to say, the story did not remain a secret in the fortress. It ran the length and breadth of Prussia, and other nations also laughed.

Up-to-Date Barges.

It is a far cry from the Erie canal to the present barge canal of New York state, and just as far from the mule-hauled canal boat to the latest type of self-propelled barges which were recently built to run on the barge canal. These barges, five in number, were built in Duluth, and will be propelled by 140-brake-horsepower direct reversible Diesel engines. They are 250 feet long, 36-foot beam, 10-foot draft, with a displacement of 2,150 tons each. Besides being self-propelled they are all thoroughly equipped with electric auxiliaries, having electric hydraulic steering gear, electric anchor windlasses, and electric capstan. They are all electrically lighted, the electricity for the various purposes for which it is used being provided on each barge by three 10-kilowatt generators, driven by a 15-horsepower Deisel engine. The cargo capacities range from 1,500 to 1,750 tons each, which, to any one who remembers the old canal boats, will give an idea of the type of traffic to be expected on the canal.

"BLUFFERS" WHO MAKE GOOD

Not Infrequently It Is Essential to Gain the Neighbors' Confidence by Any Means.

There is an oil man out west—and if his name were printed every one would know it—who on one occasion was so near the rocks that when he walked his back hair dragged on the ground. He had about as much money as a chipmunk has diamond necklaces, and his debts would sound like a statement of Europe's financial relations with the United States. But he had a good prospect. So he got together a group of investing possibilities and gave them the best dinner they had ever tasted, says a writer in an exchange.

"But how did you do it?" I asked. "You're after telling me that you had been living on rubber heels and old clothes for weeks and yet you gave them a dinner?"

"I bluffed," said the oil man. "I fooled 'em all, hotel man, waiters, cabmen, florist, every one else. If I had not put that proposition over I would have walked out of town that night if I had been lucky enough to get out of town. But I fooled 'em. And we all got rich out of it."

The theory on which he worked might be stated differently. The confidence of one's neighbors is essential to success in life, and sometimes it seems advisable to bluff in order to get it. It never pays to lop the under lip down on the breastbone and tell the world that you're a gone gosling. After all, only the man with real courage is able to bluff successfully, and such a man is worth backing—so that one might unwisely argue it is safe to back bluffers. Best say that some bluffers are worth backing. Which recalls the story of George Graham Vest, for years one of the senators from Missouri. At the convention which later nominated him his rivals had promised what they would do if elected. In his turn Vest arose.

"I will only promise you," said he, "that if I am elected I will draw the salary with clock-like regularity and spend it like a gentleman."

That bluff won. But the bluffer who can make a bluff like that is no bluffer at all.

One Too Many.

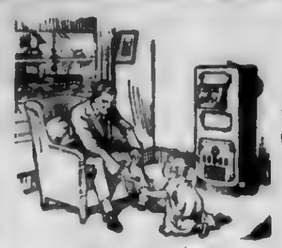
A literary family in which a seventh child had just come was at a country house, and for a time a good deal of the care of the other six children devolved upon the father, who had Spartan ideas as to the upbringing of his sons. One morning he carried his two-year-old to the creek near his home to give him a cold plunge. The child objected lustily to this proceeding, but was firmly held and ducked, notwithstanding.



At the instant of the ducking, however, a brawny hand seized the Spartan father by the shoulder and flung him back, while the angry voice of the farmer, who was his nearest neighbor, roared in his ears:

"Here! None of that! I'll have the law on you for this."

For some time the father endeavored to convince the farmer that he was not trying to drown the child. Even then he wasn't wholly convinced. To the very last minute he kept shaking his head skeptically and saying:

"Well, I dunno about that, I dunno. You got six besides this."—Harper's Magazine.

The Little Lady in Lavender

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The Fifth avenue bus plowed its drunken way up the avenue, careless of jolts to its passengers.

The little lady in lavender jerked her bonnet back, from time to time, and beamed upon the world in general. She was enjoying everything in the big city, from jolts to the chiffon lingerie displayed so tastefully in the shop windows.

The only thing she was missing terribly was some one to chat with. Her big son, with whom she had come to the city for a month or two, was always down in the turmoil of business, and even had he been beside her during her thrilling trips down the avenue he could hardly be expected to echo her own excited interest in the pretties.

Edith Vance boarded the stage at Fifty-seventh street, and because of the inviting manner in which the little lady in lavender drew aside her skirts, she took the seat beside her.

Perhaps, too, it was just because, way back in the dreams of her, Edith had pictured just such a little mother as this. Bereaved early in life, she had missed that greatest of all friendships, paidom, love—that of a mother. Her father, precious beyond all fathers, had tried to play the double role and had succeeded to as great an extent as any human being could.

But the joy of shopping for an evening gown, a wrap to go with it and perhaps one's winter furs was merely a mechanical necessity without mother to help select and offer judgment.

Thus it was that an unusually jolly jolt of the stage flung the two into conversation. It was only a beginning, but before Thirty-fourth street was reached the little lady in lavender, or Mrs. Jackson, as she was known, and Edith Vance were deep in conversation. They had found in each other a great need satisfied and did not hesitate to hold it close.

"My dear, I would like nothing better in the world," Mrs. Jackson was saying. "I have been so lonely for feminine companionship and would love to help you select your gown if you will come with me then to buy a new hat. You know most of the clerks sell an old lady most anything."

"Then we will have lunch together in one of the little tearooms. I hate to lunch all by myself." Edith radiated her joy, and something in the little lady in lavender snapped as if a floodgate of love had been suddenly flung wide open.

Their lunch was a huge success. The little lady had the exquisite feeling of having a lovely daughter all her own, and Edith—well, Edith could just have wept over the sweetness of a newfound love. She spoke of her father and Mrs. Jackson told Edith all about her big son.

"I think my dad gets a wee bit lonesome sometimes for the kind of people he enjoys—I wonder if we couldn't have tea together soon," Edith suggested.

"Oh! It would be delightful. Shall we say next Sunday?" The little lady was all excitement.

"Yes, and in the meantime you and I will just have a good time at movies and a musical comedy, and perhaps a tea dance. You will love the tea dances."

And, because of the new friendship, they indulged themselves to a taxi after a refreshing cup of tea, and parted at the hotel in which Mrs. Jackson and her son, David, were staying.

When Sunday arrived the little lady looked as much like a silver moonbeam as a human being can. Her gown was silver-gray velvet, and in her soft mass of silvery hair she wore a comb or two of amethysts. Her big son gave her a wonderful hug when she emerged from her room.

"You are getting younger and prettier every single day, little mother of mine," he told her. "I wouldn't be a bachelor today if any of the young girls had half the sparkle and charm of you, dear."

"Flatterer!" she admonished lovingly.

But it would seem as if that same sparkle and charm found its way into the heart of John Vance almost immediately he met the little lady whom his daughter had been speaking of

They were chatting over the tea like two magpies, and their smiles for each other were very lovely to see.

David and Edith, sitting a short distance from them, glanced at them from time to time, and in their own eyes were reflected, if a trifle mistily, a smile of curious contentment.

"I have known my dad to be unutterably lonely at times," Edith said softly, "and with a loneliness I, being of the younger generation, cannot fill in. Wouldn't it be wonderful, quite too wonderful, if they—"

David smiled softly and glanced again at the couple beside the tea table and just then a scrap of conversation drifted toward the younger couple.

"On the night my daughter goes to her painting class I am intolerably lonesome. She has dinner downtown and then to class. Couldn't we go on a regular spree, dinner, theatre, a bite after? Would it be asking too much of you, little lady?"

David and Edith caught a swift breath. There was no time being lost—there by the tea table.

A soft flush had spread over the little lady's face and she cast a shy glance at John Vance, then one at her big son.

"It would certainly be very delightful," she told him softly with a wonderful smile straight into the eyes of Edith's dad.

David turned to Edith.

"It looks as if the quite, quite wonderful had already happened, and that you and I are destined to be full-fledged brother and sister."

"It is so lovely I can hardly believe it," Edith said softly.

And because he was masculine and wanted not to show emotion and because the girl's voice held a tremble David grinned.

"Our new relations—I suppose you mean," he suggested and was rewarded by Edith's swift smile.

Somewhat Over-Particular.

Some of the British miners' families were very particular during the coal strike. In a certain mining village of North Ayrshire, where the strikers' children were being fed by the subscriptions which their parents extorted from the rest of the community, it was found that at the midday meal about 70 per cent of the children refused to take the soup which was offered to them, saying that they preferred bread or tea. The authorities, realizing that they were catering for a very exacting clientele, knew better than to take offense at this rebuff and announced that tea would be served at 5 o'clock, whereupon one starving child exclaimed: "That's nae guid tae me; ma music lesson's at five!"

Cat Mothers Rabbit.

An interesting case of adoption has occurred on a farm in the humble district of East Lothian, Scotland. A cat, whose kittens had been given away as they were old enough to be removed from the mother, has adopted a young wild rabbit, which she tends and nurses with great care and affection. The cat was in the habit of killing and bringing in young rabbits to feed its kittens, and it is remarkable that she now should show maternal affection towards an animal which hitherto she has regarded as prey.

FOOD FOR SPIRITS

Young Children Considered Dainties in West Africa.

So When Great Man Dies, the Little Ones, With Slaves, Are Killed and Buried With Him.

Some strange superstitions of West African negroes are described by P. L. Teagoy in the London Daily Mail. If he will, the juju man (witch doctor) of West Africa can tell you that when a man dies his spirit, or spirits, will remain behind and wander about the earth while he will "go away." It is not clear what is meant by "he" as distinct from his spirits, or where "he" goes when he does "go away," but obviously it is to a place where, if he be a big chief, he will want servants to serve him, and therefore when he dies slaves are killed, and also young children. But these latter are killed for another purpose, as the following remarks will show.

These wandering spirits are of two kinds—good, or at least harmless, called "Duppies," and evil ones, known as "Jumbis."

"Duppies," the juju man will tell you, can be seen in various forms.

There used to be a resthouse on a beach in southern Nigeria which fell into disuse because, as many white men used to know, queer black forms, sometimes like monkeys, used to run about the veranda and the rooms at night making weird noises. They did no harm, being, as every native knew, only "duppies."

The "jumbi," however, is a terrible thing—so awful that whoever sees one goes mad.

His home is in the silk-cotton, or ceba tree, and he kills the person who cuts one down. Blacks of educated West Indian descent will never cut down a silk-cotton tree.

"Jumbis" eat dead bodies, preferring those of children, though there is nothing they like better than rice.

Hence when a man or woman dies a quantity of rice is placed near the grave under a cover resembling a candle extinguisher, only with holes in the sides. The object of the holes is to enable the thin, hungry "jumbi" to enter the receptacle, where he gorges himself until he is too fat to get out again.

A fresh supply of rice is daily placed under the dome to make up for what the "jumbis" have eaten. (There are lots of rats and ground pigs in West Africa.) The process is kept up until the ninth day, when a "wake" is held, and the "jumbis" are driven away by noise and fee-ack (native magic).

That is one way of keeping the "jumbis" from the dead. But if a great man dies he has another chance of being undisturbed; for then young children are killed, and the "jumbi" eats them rather than the old person.

Many years ago, when King Take died, the then governor, in the hope of preventing any secret slaughter, ordered that he should have a grand funeral, "white man fashion."

It was a great day for the natives, several white officials attending the burial in the center of the royal compound, where, by order, they remained until the grave was filled up.

But despite these precautions, at dead of night the juju priests had their innings. Take was dug up and reburied in native fashion together with his slaves and several children.

"Why Southpaws."

The word "southpaw," used frequently in the course of references to baseball games, is a bit of slang which which has crept into the language during the last few years—a colloquialism which has behind it rather more of a logical pedigree than most slang words can claim.

That the batter may not have to face the rays of the setting sun at any time of the year, a baseball diamond is usually laid out so that the batter's box faces due east. The pitcher, therefore, faces westward, while his right hand is toward the north and his left hand is toward the south. As the majority of pitchers are right-handed, it was only natural that an exception to this rule should be singled out for a certain specific title—and the name "southpaw" was adopted on account of the usual points of the compass in connection with the diamond itself. The eccentricities of Rube Waddell and other "southpaws" have made the name synonymous with "erratic," so far as baseball language is concerned, though there is no medical support for the theory that left-handed persons are more peculiar than those who use their right hands.

Aerial Time Tables.

So important has become commercial aviation in France that there is being published a monthly time table of all the air services operating in France and allied countries. This time table, known as L'Indicateur Aerien, gives such information as the time of departure and arrival, routes, type of plane employed, weight of luggage allowed, rates, and so on. The little publication appears on the first of every month.—Scientific American.

Call for Much Shelf Room.

Five miles of shelving will be erected in a new building being constructed by the French government, for the filing of more than 100,000 volumes and almost as many pamphlets, etc., which they have collected. The collection of manuscripts, photographs and war records is appalling as to numbers, and there seems to be no limit to the gifts of collectors.

Census Reveals Odd Names.

What will be the strangest name on the British census paper? asks the London Morning Post. Last time the palm went to a Yorkshireman, who had been saddled with the name of Habershalalhashbaz. The longest name was that of a Derby child whose parents had inflicted upon her Christian names beginning with every letter of the alphabet. Of punning and other curious names there will be no end. Some of those revealed by previous enumerations have been Arch Bishop, Arch Deacon, Rose Budd, Prim Rose, Righteous Williams, Temperance Sober Lane, Sudden Death, Pine Coffin, and Alfred Gott Barwiegs. Another factor is the astonishing frequency with which such high-sounding names as Lord George Smith, Lady Mary Brown, Marcus Cicero are found in the poorer quarters of our cities. Such names are usually selected from the cheap novels which form the chief reading of the parents.

Fowls' Peculiar Appetite.

In a village in Hants, England, a man had a pen of fowls, enclosed in a wire run of 1-inch mesh. Sparrows used to get in the run under the sides and the rooster one day killed and ate a young one. After that woe betide the sparrow that entered that pen, for the old hens acquired a liking for sparrow meat and they would chase a sparrow about until they caught and killed it. In the fall the fowls were moved to another farm and shortly after a wheat stack which was infested with mice was threshed. The rooster and hens were soon on the job and had a merry time catching mice which they made short work of swallowing, after giving them a few raps on the ground.

Vote Against Bobbing.

"Well," announced the fair young thing at the dinner table. "I'm not going to get my hair bobbed after all."

"Praise be," said her father. "But why?"

"You see, it's like this," she dimpled in reply. "I didn't know whether the boys would be sure to like it, so I sent around a questionnaire. They all answered, and the result was that six of them said not to bob it, while only two were in favor, so I can't do it, really."

The San Francisco Examiner offered a prize of $100 for the best answer to the question, "What has prohibition actually accomplished to date?" More than 500 answers were sent in by "wets" and "drys." The judges awarded the prize to Will J. French, a member of San Francisco Typographical Union, his letter being said to contain the briefest, clearest and most effective answer, which was as follows:

"Prohibition has accomplished many benefits, but these three are prominent:

"First—Has divorced the liquor traffic from its former semi-legal position as a licensed business in which each citizen was a participant through Federal and State revenue systems, which meant that the crime and social and economic loss involved by intoxicating liquor were involved in a partnership with all the people.

"Second—Abolished the saloon and thus removed a source of iniquity and the most stalwart opponent of civic and political righteousness in the United States.

"Third—Has given children a better chance for the future; has thrown protection around girlhood; has afforded mothers a security heretofore unknown; has enriched the American home, and justifies itself for these reasons alone, for they are superior to species cries about personal liberty or opposition based upon appetite or profit."—Labor.

Safety and Safety Zones.

Her parents had driven up to visit her and they were driving about to see the city. They wished to do a few minutes' shopping, so they hunted for parking space. Finally they found it in front of a department store.

Returning a few minutes later she beheld a sticker notifying her to appear in court next morning. She turned to the corner trafficman:

"What, what had she done to violate the rules? They'd only been gone ten minutes and she had been very careful to see that they parked right in a safety zone, and so she had felt safe—so what—?"—Indianapolis News.

Electrifying Water.

Plain water can be made to taste like champagne, is the claim of the inventor of a new device. The invention consists of an electrical apparatus comprising a small circular tank that contains an electric cell from which two electrodes extend. One electrode is placed in the glass of water and the other is pressed against the drinker's cheek. A slight current passes through the water, giving it a sparkle similar to that of sparkling wines—at least so the inventor says.

A Great Scheme.

"What! Going to Punktown again for your vacation? Why, last summer you told me the mosquitoes were fierce and the fishing poor."

"Yes, I know, but the proprietor has written me that he has crossed the mosquitoes with the fish and guarantees a bite every second."

Hailstorms.

The starting point of a hailstorm is a layer of air laden with water-vapor. This passes rapidly through varying degrees of temperature, which first freeze the particles of water and then melt them and re-freeze them, adding other particles as the journey continues. Hailstones, in falling, are sometimes carried below the central part of the storm which gave birth to them, through successive layers of rain or snow, which, accounts for the fact that the resultant stone is formed of a number of distinct coatings, like the skins of an onion. It frequently happens that a considerable quantity of this frozen vapor is whirled by the action of the storm into the center of the tornado. Then, when the force ceases abruptly or the particles become too heavy to be supported by the wind, they fall to the earth in an almost solid mass. The connection between hailstorms and thunderstorms is because of the rapidly shifting degrees of temperature which accompany the latter—a fact which also explains why hailstorms occur usually in the spring or summer, when the majority of thunderstorms take place.

FIND STIRS MEDICAL WORLD

Discovery of Properties of Tree Growing in Bengal May Be of Immense Importance.

Investigations are being made into the medicinal properties of a forest tree indigenous to parts of Bihar and Bengal that recall the circumstances under which quinine became known to the world as a remedy for malarial fever, says the Chamber of Commerce Journal (Calcutta). The late civil surgeon of Ranchi, Lieut. Col. J. C. S. Vaughan, having noticed the occurrence of a large number of cases of malignant malaria and blackwater fever in that district, made inquiries among the aboriginal tribes to find whether they used any local plant as a cure for these diseases. It appears that there is a tree whose leaves, bark and root are all used, and experiments that have been made with the leaves raise the hope that they may prove to be a valuable addition to our stock of drugs for use in the tropics.

The tree is known by various vernacular names, but its botanical name is Vitex peduncularis. It is found not only in Chota Nagpur but also in eastern Bengal and the Duasia Terai. The simplest way to use it is to make an infusion of the leaves—one ounce of leaves to forty ounces of infusion. The effect has been found to vary, but this is true of quinine as well, and of most other drugs. In most cases larger doses or stronger infusions proved effective where the ordinary treatment had failed, and microscopic examination proved that the malarial parasites disappeared from the blood under the influence of the treatment.

A Position for the Summer

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Joan had been invited to lunch at the Civic club rooms. She was the guest of her aunt, and she felt not at all thrilled at the prospect of a couple of hours spent over the lunch table with a half-dozen women whom she had never seen before.

"You may be a bit bored, Joan," her aunt remarked, "but it won't hurt you to know a few influential women. You may even hear of something interesting to do to help with next year's college tuition."

"Interesting or not—I have to find something, Aunt Nell," Joan replied.

She was an attractive looking girl, of the athletic type, and the friends of her aunt found her a bright luncheon companion.

"I am trying to cut my living expenses in the country this summer, and I'm torn between letting my mother's helper or my chauffeur go," remarked one of the guests.

"It's a far cry from one to the other, isn't it?" asked Joan's Aunt Nell.

"Can't you drive—yourself?" asked Joan. Why anyone could have a car and not drive it was beyond comprehension with Joan, who loved to run a car.

"Yes; but I'm temperamentally unfit for it. I'm always in trouble with the village policeman or some one on the road."

"The Train Is Late Tonight."

Joan suddenly had an inspiration. "Why not discharge them both and try—me for the summer?" she asked, half in jest.

Her Aunt Nell looked at her to see if she were in earnest.

"Can you drive?"

Joan nodded. "Anything from Lizzie to Rolls-Royce," she laughed.

"And—do you know anything about children?"

"I can feed them, bathe them, correct their English, keep them out of harm—that's all. And—I love them," she added.

The elder woman looked thoughtfully at Joan for a moment. "Do you really want to do something for the summer? You're in college, aren't you?"

"I expect to graduate next year, but I must do something this summer to help dad out with my expenses. I love the country. I love to drive a car—and I adore children. Why couldn't you try me?"

"I could—why not?"

Details were arranged, and inside of a fortnight Joan was established at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Jonas as a general companion to the children and a helper.

It proved to be a very satisfactory arrangement, for not only did Joan drive Mrs. Jonas wherever she wished to go, but she took the children with her and kept them happy and well while the mother went her own way. She taught the boy of nine to help her change a tire, she showed the children how to dust out the rugs inside the car, polish the windows and do many odd tasks that took time. The boy put the water in the radiator, measured off the oil, screwed up the grease cups and learned to be a great help under the direction of Joan.

"You're a wonder, Joan," said Mr. Jonas when she had met him at the train one night with three nicely dressed and bathed children in the back seat. "Parker had nothing on you as a chauffeur, believe me."

"I'm having a wonderful time and getting fat. I shall be sorry to go back to college in September," she said, skillfully slipping past one by one the cars ahead of them on the road home.

Fuel is High and Scarce
Caloric Saves One-Third

Next to food, fuel is the most necessary article that enters into the commercial, industrial and domestic life of the world. All manufacturing enterprises, transportation systems, public service utilities, home comforts and conveniences depend upon the beneficent heat that has been stored by nature in the form of coal and wood.

Coal is by far the most widely used fuel and its importance to our national welfare may be readily appreciated by the fact that it furnishes the railroads with a greater amount of freight tonnage than any other commodity. America's annual coal bill is nearly two billion dollars and many millions of dollars' worth of coke, wood and other fuels are also consumed every year.

A large part of that $2,000,000,000 coal bill is paid by the home owners of this country. Because of its high efficiency and great economy in the use of the fuel required to heat thousands of these homes, the patented Caloric Pipeless Furnace has won the reputation of being the most popular warm air furnace manufactured. More than 125,000 Calorics are saving thousands of dollars for their owners.

Can you afford to burn gas for heat at the new rate? If your bills were for six dollars last winter, they will be ten or twelve dollars at the new rate.

devil. Mephistopheles is not among them. There were magic books in the Sixteenth century dealing with legends of demonry in which writers occasionally liked to dip when it suited their purpose to revel in the occult and to give a tonebrific effect to their work. It lent a fascinating and fearsome flavoring to a drama or poem to borrow from demonology. Le Sage scored a hit when he made Asmodeus the hero of his "Le Diable Boiteaux," translated as "The Devil on Two Sticks." This individual, unexpectedly freed from a bottle wherein he has been corked up for centuries, makes an interesting companion for the young student of Alcala who liberated him. Mephistopheles belongs to that same mystical company.

Being a somnambulist, I have had many startling experiences, but none more thrilling than when I attempted to secrete some valuable papers my husband had left in my charge while he was away. The first night of his absence I awoke to find myself, papers in hand, in the center of a beam extending from our third-story window to an adjacent tree, and left there by painters. A cold perspiration covered me when I realized my peril, but I managed almost miraculously, it seemed, to crawl back as I had crawled out.—Chicago Journal.

Nicest "Taxi" in Town

By MARY MORISON

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The starter who stood in front of the old Brevoort house was busy that afternoon. At his sharp whistle taxis came and went, one succeeding another, a continuous wave of them joining the ever-moving stream of traffic that poured up the avenue. And amid it all, stationary, a shadow of the past, stood a hansom cab, its old driver perched atop, his ancient high hat over his eyes, his reins lying slack and listless over his patient horse's back.

For twenty years Pat had stood in that same place. The time had been when it was he who had dashed up to collect his fare and had trotted off merrily to join the gay procession of shiny, black cabs going to many a gay rendezvous farther uptown. For a while it had seemed to Pat that the whole fashionable world was waiting for him and his sleek brown horse to whirl it away. But he was living to see his world a fickle thing at best and his golden place in it usurped by dago taxi drivers and their villainous, reeking cars.

The starter, with a minute or two to spare, roused Pat from his dreary revery with:

"Well, Pat, no business this afternoon—eh?"

Pat shook his head in a weary negative. "Our day's over—the nag's and moine," he answered slowly. "Tomorrow it's the auction room for me cab and the country for the nag and me, I guess. The city has no use for the likes of us any more; we're done for, shure enough."

"Too bad, Pat, old boy; too bad," sympathized the starter. "It's a long time you've had your stand here and I'll miss you. But everybody's for hurrying nowadays; it's catchin' a train with five minutes to spare, or it's tea at the Ritz in another five minutes, or the like. Well, good-by; I must be off. Here comes a young feller who'll want a taxi in a hurry, I'll bet."

Pat leaned back again, beset with gloomy thoughts of the future, taking a farewell glance at his dearly beloved New York that was treating him so badly.

The young man's voice, raised in dispute with the starter, brought him back to the present.

"No, no," he was saying. "I don't want any of your old taxis. They're too damned quick and cheerful. A hearse would be just about suited to me, but I don't suppose you have one on tap. Worse luck. Hey! that hansom cab! That driver looks almost as gloomy as anything around. He'll do." And like an angry whirlwind the young gentleman entered the hansom, calling to Pat.

"Drive me to hell, Sunny Jim."

"All roight, sor," says Pat. "But without intrudin', sor, which one is it you're meanin'?"

"Oh, any place—East End avenue and Eighty-sixth street—that'll do," snapped the young gentleman, banging the little half doors together.

"We're off," says Pat, and they joined the upward stream.

"Shure, it's a terrible way he's in," he mused. "I wonder what's ailin' him now."

He looked back over his shoulder at the hotel to see if an answer to the young man's desperate mood could be found there. And on the steps looking after the retreating cab, was one of the prettiest ladies Pat had ever seen in all his days of close association with the very best New York had to offer. She was speaking hurriedly to the starter, and they both looked after the hansom. Then the starter's sharp whistle reached Pat's ear, a taxi dashed up and the lady entered it.

"That's the answer, shure enough," said Pat to himself, and he chuckled for the first time in many a long day.

The taxi, with the lady in it, rushed by them. Out of the little window in the back Pat saw her looking intently at his fare below until she disappeared from sight up the avenue.

Pat knew every landmark on Fifth avenue, but on this last ride of his he gazed at each familiar thing as if seeing it for the first time, engraving it on his city-loving heart forever. The huge library at Forty-second street, with its guarding lions on each side—"Begad! how I love them lions!" groaned Pat. The Plaza hotel, which he had seen being built and rush comet-like into first place in the fashionable world. The park, with its mysterious distances of green—he remembered how it looked at dusk, when the green turned to a soft lavender and myriads of little lights, like stars, twinkled through it for mile upon mile.

At Eighty-sixth street he turned east, leaving behind him the modern palaces and the park. He crossed Lexington avenue, then Third, then Second, Avenue A—until it seemed as if the street was leading them right into the East river.

In front of a little row of ivy-covered red brick houses stood a familiar taxicab, and at their approach out of it stepped the same pretty lady. She paid her driver hurriedly and sent him back toward the rushing world of Fifth avenue as Pat drew up.

Pat's fare first caught sight of the lady as he was in the act of descending from the cab. He stood stark still, half in and half out of the cab, motionless, as if turned to stone.

"Philip," said the girl, laying her hand on the gloomy young man's arm.

Pat was a gentleman. His association with the beaux monde in those splendid old days stood him in good stead now—for he sat on top of his ancient vehicle looking neither to the right nor to the left; as if he heard and saw nothing. Nobody stirred on the quiet street. Pat, the young lady, and the angry-eyed gentleman were alone on the brink of the East river.

"Philip," continued the lady, breathlessly; "when I saw you drive off with that desperate look on your face—I just couldn't stand it, and when the starter at the hotel told me you had given orders to drive here—to the river—all sorts of horrid things came into my mind. I would have bitten my tongue out for the things I had said to you. I—why did you come to this jumping off place, Philip?"

The young man's face twisted into a smile. "I live here, that's all," he said, pointing to the last of the little houses in the row. "You would have thought you were miles and miles away from the theaters and the shops. It was so quiet and still on East End avenue. The little red house gleamed warm and snug in the fading sunlight; the only moving thing to be seen was a big four-masted schooner (like Pat and his cab, one of the last of its kind) moving majestically up the river in front of them—silent and swift as the wind caught its broad white sails.

Perhaps it was the unexpected beauty of the scene that made the girl's eyes fill with tears and turn her head away. Or perhaps it was because she realized the tragedy of Pat and his old hansom, or the four-masted schooner on what might be its last voyage, or the passing of love—who knows? But whatever it was, it was enough for Philip. He leaped out of the cab and lifted her in, as if she had been a feather. His erstwhile gloomy face was alight, his voice vital and ringing as he called to Pat:

"Hey, there, old sober-sides; drive on. It doesn't matter where—just drive on," and he jumped back into the cab beside the girl.

"Yes, sor," said Pat, who made for Central park, where he saw the green distances beginning to turn to a dainty lavender and the little lights sparkling through the dusk.

"And some folks say the country beats New York," he mused, forlornly—"St. Patrick! How we'll hate it, the nag and me!"

Three hours later he opened the little trap door in the roof. "Shure, it's not lookin' I am, sor," he called, "but how much longer do you want me? It's a hard day I have ahead of me tomorrow and it's no dinner I've had, sor."

He heard a laugh below and—"Dinner! the poor old thing wants dinner!" came up through the trap door. Then the young man got out and came up close to Pat.

"Say, driver," he said, smiling at the girl who was leaning around the side, "we both think this is the nicest taxi in town. We've our own special reasons for liking this old bus. What would you say to engaging yourself to us as our own and particular driver at the rate of eighty dollars a month? Would that cover things for you?"

There was a silence, through which Pat looked at all the little blinking lights of Central park and the brilliant length of Fifth avenue beyond. The young man, not understanding, continued:

"We're going to be married next week—and—well, we like your style, that's all. What do you say?"

"Good God, sor—I, well, make it eighty-foive and I'm wid you," said Pat huskily.

A Position for the Summer

On several evenings when she had to wait for the train and had parked the car at the usual stopping place she observed a good-looking young chauffeur who usually placed his car next to hers. Always this young fellow was reading during his spare moments.

"The train is late tonight," he remarked to Joan one evening as their eyes met. They were both looking down the track for the over-due express train.

"Yes—quite," Joan replied.

From that bromidic beginning their conversation grew into intellectual channels and Joan always managed to be at the parking place a few minutes ahead of train time in order to talk with the young fellow in the big foreign car.

She learned that he had been at the French front in the ambulance corps and that, suffering from various after-effects of the war, he had been ordered by his physician to do some easy work that would keep him in the open air.

"Therefore—I chauf," he laughed.

"And I? Do you know about me?" Joan queried.

"I know some things," the young man admitted, saying more with his glance than with words.

"I, too, am a chauffeur," she announced. "I'm helping Mrs. Jonas with the children and driving the car while I'm resting," she laughed.

Then she told him how she happened to have the position, and it was not many days before they had made a trysting place, as young persons will who have no homes to ask each other into. They met during the summer evening and strolled along the water front or went out in a canoe.

Joan asked permission to take the children to the beach and frankly told Mrs. Jonas that she was meeting John Moore and that he enjoyed the children and helped to watch them at the water's edge.

"I never realized before what you are to me," Mrs. Jonas told her. "I feel as if I could not get along without you. The children are so happy and they've developed so much since they've been with you. My boy has grown to be quite a man, and he's all wrapped up now in studying about the distance of the sun from the earth, the number of light years Mars is removed from us and all sorts of things he's picked up from you and—"

"From John—please, Mrs. Jonas. He is crazy about astronomy and he teaches Gordon whatever he can. It is lots of fun and—"

Joan was blushing. She had been about to say that it was such a pleasure for her to be with—them all.

"Don't worry, Joan," Mrs. Jonas said, sympathetically. "I know how it is. Be happy while you can. Have your youth and romance now. It is summer."

Joan felt as if she could never bear the end of this wonderful season, but as it drew to a close John told her that he loved her. He knew that he had no right, as yet, to speak; but he wanted her to know that he would think of her always, of her alone.

"I'll get strong and well, Joan, while you are finishing college. Then I can go back into the game again and—"

Joan had turned away.

"Turn back to me. Let me see your eyes. And then—may I hope to have you, dear?" he asked when he had searched her eyes.

"I—I only took this position for the summer," she teased him.

"But you will take me—forever, please?" he pleaded.

"I will," she said.

Origin of the Guinea.

The mystery of that dreadful uncoined unit of barter in England known as the "guinea" which is abstracted from the pocket in place of the pound very much to the damage of the metric and all other systems seems to have been solved at last. Now, the pound is 20 shillings and the guinea is 21 shillings so that it is cherished by hotels and lodging houses because it is divisible by seven. This is good as far as it goes, but why does a London doctor charge a guinea a visit when a quarter less (when exchange is normal) would do as well?—Scientific American.

PALACE MADE INTO REFUGE

Russian Embassy at Rome Put to Practical Use by the Authorities of the City.

The Russian embassy in Rome, a large and once magnificently furnished villa, standing in its own grounds in the aristocratic Porta Pia quarter, has been turned into a refuge, especially at night, for the many Russians who have swarmed in Rome since the disbanding of Wrangel's army.

The beautiful drawing rooms are reduced to a state of dirt and untidiness and a general dilapidation hard to describe; every nook and corner is crowded with some poor human victim of Russia's revolution. Princesses rub shoulders with peasant women, and men who figure in Russia's history are glad to make cigarettes at 75 cents a hundred to buy a little food. In any other circumstance the sanitary authorities would interfere and end the overcrowding.

For two reasons this human rabbit warren is allowed to exist side by side with rich men's palaces and foreign embassies. To begin with, no one has the heart to turn the refugees into the street, which would be the only place available for them in the overfilled city of Rome. But there is a political reason, too; Vodovsky, Lenin's emissary now in Rome, is moving heaven and earth to get the foreign ministry to evict the refugees, so that he may take possession of the embassy in the name of the soviet. And Count Sforza is determined that he shall not, because it would be tantamount to official recognition of Lenin's government.

As Vorovsky might possibly get his Italian communist friends to help him break into the villa, it is guarded day and night by those military police known as Guardia Regia. Never before has an embassy in Rome fallen to the depths of a night refuge or had such a guard of honor and of protection.

Concerning Color.

Blue is the coldest of the colors and green the next coldest, according to Good Housekeeping. Green is produced by mixing yellow—a warm color—with blue, hence it is less cold than pure blue. So long as it contains more blue than yellow, it is a "cool" color, but the moment the yellow overbalances the blue, a "warm" green begins to develop. Blue and blue-green are termed "receding" colors because a surface colored blue or green, particularly in light values, appears more distant than it actually is. These attributes of coolness and recedingness are true in different degrees of every color tinged with green or blue, including blue-lavender, blue-purple, and bluish and greenish gray. Pure gray is the only perfect neutral except black and white. It is normally a receding color, somewhat cool in effect. It becomes cooler as it is tinged with blue or green and warmer as it is tinged with pink or yellow. Gray and the modifications of blue and green make small rooms appear larger and help to counteract the effect of too sunny an exposure.

The second Jones reunion was held at Glenwood Park, September 11. ## Obituaries

Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Ault was born near Clarenton, Ohio, February 10th, 1865. She was one of eleven children and the first of them to be called home. She was the daughter of Philip Louis Tschappat and Catherine Tschappat, his wife. She received her schooling in Adams township. Later the family moved to Bellesville, Ohio, where she grew to womanhood. Mrs. Ault was baptised in infancy by a minister of the Lutheran Church of which her parents were members. She joined the Presbyterian Church on affirmation of her faith at about seventeen years of age.

She has lived in Columbus about 30 years, having moved here to assist her brother in his store. She was also employed in two private homes in Columbus and in 1895 met Mr. N. C. Ault, who subsequently became her husband June 30th, 1897. The Rev. Helfrich then pastor of West Broad Street Presbyterian Church, performing the ceremony. While in Columbus, Mrs. Ault attended the Congregational Church, the West Broad Presbyterian Church and finally became a charter member of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Ault was born one son, Frederick Calvin Ault, August 13, 1903.

She leaves besides her husband and son, five brothers and five sisters to mourn their loss.

During the spring of this year she has been in failing health. Her sickness really became serious about August 4th and on August 3rd she took to her bed and from then on became increasingly weak and helpless. On August 30th she was taken to Martha Washington Hospital where the end came quietly Thursday evening, September 9th at 8:25 o'clock, the cause being pronounced inflammation of the heart muscles.

Mrs. Ault was a homeloving woman. Her entire time was spent in making circumstances pleasant for her family and attending to her church duties. In the latter she was pre-eminent in faithfulness of attendance and in her willingness to help in whatsoever capacity she was needed. Besides being a member of the Personal Workers' Bible Class, the Ladies' Aid Society and the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, she regularly assisted her husband during the last eight years in taking care of the church and it was due to no small effort on her part that the church was tidy and neat in appearance for each service held there.

Early in life Mrs. Ault was an active member of the W. C. T. U. She carried into her work in the organizations of the church her whole soul and effort and she will be sadly missed in each one of the organizations mentioned.

Mrs. Ault was a diligent reader of the Bible and was regularly found preparing her Sabbath School lesson in which she found much pleasure. She was a good neighbor, a friend to all who knew her and in her long residence on the Hilltop endeared herself to many, many friends.

Having helped start the mission Sunday School on the Hilltop which later became the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, she became one of the first members at the church organization. Consequently when the fifteenth anniversary of the church's founding was celebrated last spring, it was due to her careful preservation of records and papers that much of the interesting early history was secured.

Near the end she was pleasantly hopeful for the return of her health. She was faithful unto death and of her it may be said: "Thou hast been ruler over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things—enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

In the light of God we see you,
Each night we lay down;
We hear your voice as when on earth,
And see each smile and frown,
And when we are called to join you,
This world and we are thru,
We pray the Lord to let us go,
As peaceful and brave as you.

Resolutions passed by the session of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church Thursday, September 9, 1921, in respect to Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Ault (Mrs. N. C. Ault).

Whereas, in the all-wise Providence of God, Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Ault was called to her eternal reward on Thursday night, September 9, 1921; and

Whereas, she was a charter member of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church; and

Whereas, she has very ably assisted her husband, Mr. N. C. Ault, in caring for said church through a period of eight busy years; and

Whereas, she has been a very active and effective member of the Personal Workers' Bible Class of the Sunday School, of the Ladies' Aid Society, and of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of this church; and

Whereas, in many untold ways she has expressed the Christian faith of her life in the service of the Lord;

Be it resolved, that the Session of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church in this, its regular meeting, assembled, express deep appreciation of the services rendered the church throughout these fifteen years of her membership; and

Be it resolved, that the attention of the entire membership be drawn to one who was regular in attendance at all services and who was loyal in her devotion to her Lord and Master; and

Be it resolved, that as Elders of this church we commend her fidelity and constancy shown in so many ways and that such commendation be herewith presented to her bereaved husband and son with all sympathy and Christian love; and

Be it further resolved, that copies of these resolutions be drawn and presented, one to the family, one printed in The Hilltop Record, and that they be spread on the minutes of the Session of this church.

RICHARD E. SHIELDS, Moderator.
H. A. LEAR, Clerk.

William Herschel Martindale, the subject of this sketch, was born in Gallia county, Ohio, February 4th, 1871, and passed away at his late residence, 145 South Warren avenue, on September 7th, 1921, aged 50 years, 7 months and 3 days.

He was the second son of John and Olive Martindale, who were the parents of ten children. Herschel was the first to go from this large family of children.

His early life was spent on the home farm in Gallia county.

In 1901 he was united in marriage to Mrs. Nellie Watkins, of Columbus, who, with one son and wife and little daughter, survive.

Brother Herschel was a member of Glenwood M. E. Church and an official member of same.

He was also a member of York Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, which fact he held in the highest esteem.

For the last eighteen years he had been a postal clerk in the Columbus postoffice, where he was highly respected and loved by his many associates. Herschel's life was all lived in a clean, upright and industrious way.

"One who never turned his back.
But marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, tho' right were
Worsted, wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are
Baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake."

A system of electric lights so toned and adjusted will give a daylight effect at night, so that papers can be selected at night as well as day. The room is comfortably fitted with willow chairs, etc., thus making it one of the finest wall paper stores in the city. Mr. Pepple invites you to come and inspect it.

Reuben D. Madden, 42, colored, teamster, 397 South Wheatland avenue, was attacked by a highwayman Tuesday morning. His head was beaten into a pulp. He was assaulted in the rear of his home. Too badly hurt to describe the crime or its perpetrators in detail, Madden told officers that he heard some one behind him say "put 'em up." Before he could comply, he added, something hit him on the head, and he "went out."

Neighbors found him on the front porch of his home, whither he had crawled after the attack. A blood spattered "two by four," used by his assailant, was found near the scene of the attack.

We desire to extend our thanks to our fritnds and neighbors of the Hilltop and to the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, to the Missionary and Aid Societies, to the Men's and Women's Bible Classes for their kindness and beautiful flowers, also to Rev. ## MUSKRAT IN TERRAPIN ROLE

Professor Reveals Secret on Finding Bones of Fur-Bearer in Turtle Dish at Lunch.

Only an absent-minded science person would have put bones from the terrapin stew into his pocket, instead of on his plate.

"Now, isn't that just like a bone turning specialist?" said his host genially, turning to the group of servants whom he was entertaining at luncheon at a leading hotel, according to the New York Sun. "If I thought that you wanted a skeleton of one of the diamond backs, I would have had the chef save one for you, shell and all."

The science person stirred uneasily in his chair.

"Sorry," he ruminated. "Didn't realise it. Not a good luncheon trick. Silence and social graces don't go together, do they? Such remarkable bones for a terrapin stew that I wanted to study them."

"Come, now, speak up, professor, what kind of anatomy was it? Baby dinosaur?"

"Oh, no," the professor said. "Such terrapin are raised for the market in considerable quantity in Dorchester county, Maryland. Their fur is also highly esteemed."

Right then and there something was started. The head waiter was sent for, and when pressed for details, said that he was quite sure that the diamond backs had come direct from Baltimore. The steward came next.

"Well," he said finally, "do you suppose there is enough terrapin raised in this country to supply all the hotels? I should say not."

The bones which the professor had disinterred were those of a muskrat, for in the county of Dorchester muskrats are raised in large quantity not only for their fur, but also as terrapin par excellence. The dark brown flesh is not unlike that of the land tortoise. Muskrats are clean feeders when they have a chance and before they are killed for the terrapin market they are carefully fattened on the choicest materials. Only recently in one of the French magazines there was an article on the diamond back in which due credit was given to "the County de Dorchester," in America, for producing such an excellent substitute for a costly delicacy.

Machinery Tells Own Ills.

Most of us are, unfortunately, more or less familiar with the stethoscope, which the doctor uses when listening for the signs of defective action in our lungs or heart. It is not so widely known that the same kind of instrument can be employed to detect abnormal noises in moving machinery. The latest development in this workshop stethoscope, due to a British engineer, lies in the use of a kind of telephone receiver in place of the stethoscope rod.

The advantage of this device is that every bearing and every gear in a factory can be fitted permanently with a receiver and all the receivers can be connected by electric wires to a single board in the manager's office or any other convenient spot. By means of suitable switches the manager can examine each bearing or gear in succession without moving from the board. Since abnormal internal noise is often the first sign of trouble which may lead to breakdown, this simple and rapid means of detection is an invaluable aid to the factory owner.—Victoria Colonist.

Power of Radium.

The power of radium to reveal things hidden is continually finding some fresh application; now it discloses the secret history of old pictures, now it saves the fisherman from wasting his pearl oysters, showing him whether or not an unopened oyster contains pearls. Lately its power of revealing its own presence has been made use of, bringing a happy sequel to what would have been an expensive mistake indeed. A tube of radium worth £1,200 was, by mistake, thrown into a furnace. The one responsible, greatly concerned, called in a radium expert. They raked the ashes out of the furnace and then sprinkled them with zinc sulphide. The radium caused the zinc sulphide which had fallen on it to become luminous, and, to the great relief of all concerned, the little tube was picked out of the patch of light unharmed.—Christian Science Monitor.

Political Strategy.

"How did Senator Snortsworthy get such a reputation for political acumen?"

"The senator never waits until the band wagon is crowded before he climbs aboard."

"No?"

"When it's about half-full, he mounts with no apparent hurry and conducts himself with such dignity and aplomb that the late comers think he has been there all the time."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

WONDERS AT MIGHTY RIVERS

English Visitor Declares Those of America Put Celebrated Streams of Europe to Shame.

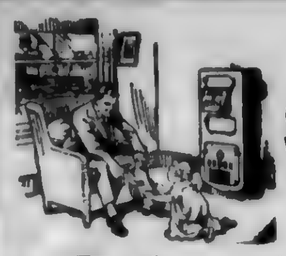
Is there anything in nature so majestic and spirit-stirring as a great river? And are there any nobler rivers on earth than those of America? The traveler who does not study up his map in advance is constantly coming unawares upon majestic yet uncelebrated streams, which in Europe would be world famous.

Not long ago, journeying from Massachusetts into New Hampshire, I found the train following for hours a beautiful river for whose existence I was quite unprepared, writes William Archer in the Atlantic. Inquiring its name, I learned that it was the Merrimac, and was further informed that it drove more spindles than any other river in the world. A little later business took me to Binghamton, N. Y., and again a beautiful river lent dignity to an otherwise undistinguished town. Once more I had to confess my ignorance; this was the Susquehanna, just entering the state of Pennsylvania on its way to Chesapeake bay.

Yet these are so to speak, hole-and-corner rivers, not to be compared to the great arteries of the continent. The superb expanse of the Hudson puts Rhine and Danube to shame. No less grandiose than romantic is the confluence at Pittsburgh of the Allegheny and the Monongahela, with the tiny little blockhouse of Fort Pitt still occupying the tip of the tongue of land, overshadowed by the giant buildings of the city of steel. And the Allegheny and Monongahela unite in the mighty Ohio; and the mighty Ohio itself is but a tributary of the still mightier Mississippi, the father of waters.



Without any disrespect to the Nile, the Euphrates or the Ganges, great rivers of the past, I venture to find these great rivers of the future every bit as thrilling to the imagination.

Beecher and Books.

Somebody happily recalls what Henry Ward Beecher said about books and believes it is well worthy of reproduction, more especially because there seems to be a revived liking for books just now. Well, it is worthy of reproduction anyway:

"Books are the windows through which the soul looks out," said the Plymouth pastor. "A house without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means to buy them. It is a wrong to his family. He cheats them. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading and grows upon it. And love of knowledge, in a young mind, is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passions and vices. A little library growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a young man's history. It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life."

SPEED OF BIRDS

Observations Show It Has Been Overestimated.

Airplane Travels Faster, but Winged Creatures Beat It in Starting and Alighting.

Every one surely who has watched the flight of the swifter birds has made his own estimate as to their speed. The speeds attained by the carrier pigeon, the duck and the faster of the sea birds have formed the subject of endless guesswork and inevitable exaggeration. Birds which are incapable, even when at full stretch, of doing more than forty to fifty miles an hour, have been credited with 100 and more.

Now, the fact of the matter is that nothing is more difficult than to judge of the speed of any object through the air by mere human observation. Foreshortening due to perspective alone renders it impossible to tell just when a moving object passes above some fixed point on the ground, and almost invariably the estimated speed is far beyond the actual. At the present time the highest well-authenticated speed is that of homing pigeons, some of which have reached a speed of 60 miles an hour over comparatively short distances.

But now comes Colonel Meinertzhagen, a noted ornithologist in Great Britain, with the statement that during his anti-aircraft duties in the war, he trained his men in instrumental work by making them take observations of the flight of birds. These he collected and then confirmed their results by instrumental work himself. He tells us that the speed of birds, as thus accurately ascertained, is far below what it is popularly believed to be, varying from twenty to forty miles for the smaller passeres to from forty to fifty miles an hour in the case of waders. Those speeds represent steady flight; but when a bird is frightened by an enemy, or when it is pouncing upon its prey, it can accelerate greatly for a limited time. He estimates that for a short distance the swift can reach a speed of 100 miles an hour.

The airplane, therefore, has greatly surpassed the swiftness of the birds both in its power of sustained speed and in its maximum speed. From 100 to 120 miles an hour can be maintained by many of the standard machines, and we know that last year the racing speed was carried up to from 180 to 190 miles per hour, while recent models are credited to be even faster.

Where the birds still greatly surpass the human flying machines is in the matter of taking off and alighting. The seabirds, and all birds in fact, by changing the angle of incidence of their wings, are able to reduce their landing speed at a rate which the airplane and the seaplane cannot at present approach.—Scientific American.

Cool Phones Hold Customers.

The canny manager of a Times Square drug store has hit upon a plan to get business in this hot weather, trade which ordinarily was lost, according to the New York Sun. By the simple plan of installing a battery of electric fans near every telephone booth he claims he has been able to keep the store's business up to the level of the cooler months. As he puts it:

"When I saw people leave the booths after a hot session of telephoning and rush to the street for air, I found I lost business. It was a case of complying with the cardinal principles of business: 'Never let them get away without buying something.'

"Most stores have their phones situated in the closest part of their interiors. Artificial air to cool them off has been an excellent method of persuading them to stay after they make their calls in coolness and comfort. The idea paid for itself the first three hours of operation on one of the hottest of recent days."

Gorgeous Fountain for Indian Garden.

A gorgeous electric fountain has been designed and built in this country for the garden of the Maharajah of Mysore, India, which will cost that distinguished gentleman about one-quarter of a million dollars before it is completed. It was designed by Walter D'A. Ryan of the General Electric company, and built by the latter company. It is constructed of translucent glass lighted from within by hundreds of electric lights projecting colored rays, the lamps being hidden from view. It is said to be the most beautiful electric fountain in the world.

"What for?"

CITY OF SQUALOR

Filth and Vice Chief Characteristics of Constantinople.

According to British Observer, the Turkish Capital Is an Excellent Place to Avoid.

Constantinople is not a pleasant place, to judge by the account of F. Holmes, writing from that city in the London Daily News.

"Often in my dreams," he writes, "there comes back again suddenly the strange, sickly odor, and I glide again over the thick, oily, muddy waters dotted with the bloated bodies of dead oxen and asses, with here and there a two-legged corpse instead. We land again in Tophane quay and plunge into what I verily believe and sincerely hope to be a scene which, for filth, sordidness, squalor, misery and flagrant and outrageous vice has no parallel elsewhere in Europe.

"The rough cobbled streets are thickly strewn with decaying garbage of every description, and upon this filth the vegetable vender heaps his wares. Passing the butchers' shops in summer the handkerchief flies instinctively and in mere self-defense to the nose; the color of the meat, so far as it could be discerned for flies, was green. Every second shop in the Rue de Galata is a so-called 'Bier haus'; where the more fortunate sailor is merely drugged, robbed of all he possesses and flung out into the street to be picked up by the patrol. The less fortunate is not flung out and is never heard of again.

"A verminous, villainous multitude of every nation under heaven passes continually up and down these streets, squabbling eternally. Women of all nationalities, united only by the common bond of universal vice and universal disease, lurk in their thievish corners. Disease of every kind rages, of course.

"Looking at the city from the sea, the eye is generally caught by certain curious slate gray patches. They are the burnt-out areas. Two or three times a week during summer the city is lit by a huge blaze. As nearly all the houses are of wood and the fire brigade is a bad joke these fires usually destroy five hundred buildings or so before they burn themselves out. The government has now created a housing problem by forbidding the creation of any more wooden houses. The population solves it after its manner: The Turk squats in the ruins of his burnt house—in the cellar if it is intact; if not, in any stone foundation that may remain covered in with boards and old clothes.

"Such is the Christian quarter of Constantinople."

Fashions in China.

Notwithstanding the popular western fancy that fashions never change in China, the Chinese woman is painstakingly particular as to the exact length and fullness—or scantiness—of her coats, skirts and trousers. She is carefully precise about the width of bias bands or braid or lace that she uses for trimming, the number and arrangement of fastenings, the shape and height of her collar. All of these details vary as tyrannically from season to season—under Shanghai guidance—as certain style features do with us under the leadership of New York or Paris. Moreover, as against our four seasons, the fashion devotees of China takes account of eight.

Tractor Hauls Gun Over Water.

In line with similar experiments in France and England, a submarine tractor has been developed in this country which is capable of traveling through water to a depth of ten or twelve feet. By the simple expedient of equipping the carburetor with a periscope, air is insured for the gasoline mixture. The seat of the driver is high enough so that ordinarily there is no particular danger of his taking an involuntary bath. Provision is made for the mounting of a small fieldpiece on top. The vehicle is shown by a full page illustration in the August Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Not a Spark of Sentiment.

"Let's sit here on the shore and listen to what the sad sea waves are saying," pleaded the romantic young man.

"No, thanks," replied the beach beauty. "If that's the extent of your conversational powers we'll breeze along to the hotel."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

HOW COOLIE SAVES HIS FACE

Chinaman Is Amusing and Ingenious, but His Little Tricks Do Not Always Work.

Chinese workmen would rather endure any amount of physical pain than to lose face, writes Sam Dean in Asia. I made that discovery through an experience we had with our gatekeeper soon after my arrival in China. We had dismissed him because he insisted on collecting 10 per cent on some goods we had brought into the courtyard to bale for shipment to America. When I came home one night, shortly afterward, I found him mounted on the horse block in front of the gate, haranguing several hundred listeners. He told them how he had been cheated and discharged, and then, tightening a loosely knotted cord that encircled his neck, he went to the front door; tied one end of the cord to the brass knocker and sank down till he was half strangled. Then he arose and addressed the assembly still further. I had seen enough. I rushed into the hold and told a friend who had been in China longer than I what was happening. He ran out, gave the gatekeeper a shake and said: "If you hang yourself at our door, I will kick you to death." The crowd burst out laughing, and the old man, who had hoped to make us lose face, lost so much himself that he sneaked away as fast as he could. I remember another and more amusing case when the crowd laughed no less heartily at the expense of the foreigner. He was a whale of an Italian contractor, and he was in charge of the rebuilding of the Peking south gate. In one spot the coolies were using a tamper made of a large round iron casting with ropes attached. They held the ropes and, throwing their bodies backward and forward in time with a song they were singing, they raised and lowered the casting. Meanwhile, however, they were losing face with the crowd, for the Italian was laying on pretty vigorously with the cane, and so, to retrieve their honor, they began to sing with all their might:

"Old foreign devil, old foreign devil
Beat, beat him, beat him in the earth!"

The Italian did not understand, but the crowd did and laughed heartily; the foreigner was giving the coolies blows with a stick, but they were hitting him a mental crack that made a fool of him.

Old Scottish Sunday Dinner.

In a letter of Sir Walter Scott, dated in 1824, he describes a typical Sabbath in Edinburgh 100 years ago as follows:

"I have always been intimate with the Forbeses from my infancy, since the excellent old lord with his wife and family used weekly to dine at my father's always on a Sunday, and on the same bill of fare, which would now be thought a curious one to invite a nobleman to. In the first place there was sheep-head broth and said sheep's head itself, the reason being that the sheep's head, which requires much boiling, was put on the night before, and the dressing of the beefsteaks occupied the least possible time, and thus the necessity of employing servants on the Sabbath day was diminished as much as possible. Then there was a bottle or two of special wine, which no wine merchant had fitted for the market, and there was a sermon read, during which one part of the children were sleeping and the other pinching and kicking them to make them keep awake. And then there is an old Sabbath for you in Edinburgh."

Sowing Salmon.

In a desperate attempt to preserve a cheap food for the people, Canada and the northwestern states are literally farming the sea and sowing salmon seed in all the important streams from California to northern Alaska. The tremendous drain upon the natural resources of supply has been so exhausting that salmon fisheries must soon have traveled the road of the forests and buffalo.

Those Useless Questions.

"Now, tomorrow," said the teacher of the summer school. "I wish you each to write an essay on August."

"Shall we write it on paper?"

"I have no objections to you writing it on papyrus if you have any."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

New Cure for Cataract.

A new instrument has been invented by a Spanish surgeon for the cure of cataract of the eye by means of suction. The new method obviates the use of the knife which makes an operation so undesirable in the cases of elderly patients. The former Empress Eugenie was treated by this method in her ninety-fourth year with remarkable success.

No Use for It.

"What's the matter, old chap? Didn't she return your love?"

"That's just the trouble. She returned it and told me to give it to some other girl."—Boston Transcript.

Vol. 5. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, September 22, 1921 No. 29

Social Stunts

The young folks of the Hilltop had a very pleasant surprise party on Marion Harrison, 106 North Park Ave., Friday evening, it being her birthday. The evening was spent with games. After refreshments, all wished Marion many happy returns. The guests were Mary and William Davis, Paul and Thelma McBride, Florence and Esther Jones, Esther Guyer, Elizabeth Skipper, Robert Roush, Helen Stuart, Richard and Evylin Wright, Harold McLaughlin and Marion and John Harrison.

A party of friends very pleasantly surprised Miss Vernita Daugherty, last Tuesday evening at the home of her uncle, Earl Douglass, it being her nineteenth birthday. Those present: Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Findieve, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Tiller, Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Fishbaugh, Mr. and Mrs. Fairchild. Supper was served in the basement, which was prettily decorated. The party broke up at a very late hour, all expressing themselves as enjoying a pleasant evening.

Midland avenue has one of the liveliest bunches of girls on the Hilltop. They call it the "Sunshine Club." Mr. Dyer, 143 Midland, has a large garage on the rear of his lot, a part of which was not "working" recently, so he turned said part of garage over to the Sunshine Club who, by the judicious use of various kinds of lumber and curtains of various shades, rigged up a stage on which they exhibit a program of Hindoo stunts, trapeze performances, songs, recitations, etc., also a "movie." all gotten up and carried on by themselves. They performed to a "packed" house last Saturday afternoon, and if you should see some of their "bills" stuck up on telephone poles for next Saturday, just take it in.

The girls names are Alvarene Paullin, Olive Monroe, Dorothy Dye, Louise Hamilton, Thelma Hamilton, Lawrence Krause is stage manager, and Carl Ryan moving picture manager.

Mrs. W. P. Castoe and son, Hubert, of Kenton, O., spent the first week of September with Mrs. C. A. Ingham of Highland avenue, while Rev. Castoe attended conference at Bellefontaine. The following week, Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Castoe and son with Mr. and Mrs. Melville Swanson and son motored to Syracuse, Ohio, and spent the week with Rev. Castoe's mother, Mrs. Meda McDaniel, who returned with them to Kenton.

Mrs. Anna Crabbe, 31, wife of Newton H. Crabbe, 179 S. Burgess Ave., and their daughter, Alice Crabbe, aged 8, were killed when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Baltimore & Ohio passenger train near Mt. Sterling Saturday evening.

Mr. Crabbe, who is a foreman at the Phillips Printing Co., and a daughter, Mary, aged 11, are in Grant Hospital. The child is not expected to recover from a compound fracture of the leg and internal injuries.

Double funeral services for his wife and daughter were held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the residence. Burial in Mt. Sterling Cemetery.

So that he might see his wife, Mrs. Anna Crabbe, and daughter, Alice, aged 8, once more before their burial, Mr. Crabbe was taken from Grant Hospital Tuesday afternoon in an ambulance and placed near their caskets at his home during the double funeral services. Mary has been unconscious since the accident. After the funeral services Mr. Crabbe was returned to the hospital.

Funeral of Paul Edward Gaffney, 8, son of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Gaffney, 235 S. Hague Ave., who died of lockjaw caused by a foot wound at Mt. Carmel Hospital, Saturday, was held at 8:30 a. m. Tuesday at St. Aloysius Church. Burial in St. Joseph's Cemetery. He leaves his parents, two brothers and seven sisters.

A rummage sale conducted by the Ladies' Aid Society of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church will be held the first week in November, location to be announced later. Those wishing to donate any discarded articles, such as clothing, shoes, hats, stockings, bedclothing, dishes, pictures, etc., will please notify any member of the society and they will be called for. Chil-

Mrs. Emma Calb, through her attorney, J. Berry, filed a motion by her next friend, Mr. Bear, Jr., to remove her son as guardian and have her declared sane. Judge Bostwick sustained the motion and declared Mrs. Calb sane and able to attend to her own business. Some of the people of the Hilltop that know Mrs. Calb and her family seem to think it was an effort on the part of some of her children to get her property. She had money that they tried hard to find, but could not. Dr. J. B. Hamblin certainly proved a friend to her in need in the hearing. He showed that he is a good Samaritan to help the helpless in the hour of need. XXX.

Mrs. Ed Kaufman left last week for New York, to take care of her sister-in-law who is quite ill.

Is there a Hilltop troop of Girl Scouts? Yes. Last Friday evening several girls gathered at Scout Munyan's home, 174 South Warren avenue, and with the aid of Captain Mildred Fisher and Lieutenant Irene Slagle, succeeded in forming the Hilltop troop. Enlistments are now open for all girls from 12 years up, all denominations are welcome and we hope to have a fine troop of girls within the next few weeks.

The Girl Scout work is new on the Hilltop and we need the good will of the public to help move things along. This broad democracy is American in every sense of the word, and the patrol system which is the keynote of the organization by which eight girls of about the same age and interests elect their Patrol Leader and practice local self-government in every meeting, carries out American ideals in practical detail.

Come to the next meeting, 174 S. tember 23, at 7:30.

RESOLUTION ON THE DEATH OF MRS. ELIZABETH AULT

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, to remove from our midst our esteemed friend and classmate, Elizabeth Ault, September 8, 1921;

Whereas, We as a Christian body of women of the Personal Workers' Class of the Hoge Memorial Sunday School submit to the divine will of Him who doeth all things well;

Therefore, Be It Resolved, That we have lost in her a faithful, untiring worker, an exemplary Christian, a kind friend to all. And be it further resolved, that we shall always remember her kind deeds, her ever willingness to do for her church in her quiet Christian way. And be it resolved, that each one of us remember her as an example of Christian womanhood, and by our living we may enjoy the reward she has so nobly won,

And Be It Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be handed to the husband and son: one to our minister, and also be recorded in the minutes of this meeting—this day, September 12, 1921.

Committee on Resolutions,
Mrs. W. G. Davis
Mrs. Bruce H. Oyler
Mrs. Riley
Mrs. Dinsmore.

Memorial Church last year broke all records of the past in raising money for current expenses and missions. Moreover this church received more new members by baptism than any other Baptist Church in the Columbus Association. More sick people have been healed in answer to prayer — miraculously healed — than has been tabulated. Those who really enjoy being sick are at liberty to remain at home and enjoy their diseases.

Last week Horton Bell of this city who in an auto going at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour ran into a tree plunging Mr. Bell through the windshield, terribly cutting wind pipe and jugular vein and otherwise badly lacerating the neck and face. He was within five minutes of death from bleeding. But the call went forth for prayer and he is now recovering rapidly and soon will leave the hospital for his home.

Vamping for Pity

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS.

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When one is frankly fifty-and-something, with no beauty perior mitigations, it appears she might reasonably escape any suspicion of vamping, even though appearances might be against her. Mrs. Frances Lane was firmly of that opinion—and facts disprove it. In this wise:

She was not impressive—thin, almost whitefty, indeed, with ash-gray hair and skin like aged rose leaves, she was yet somehow distinguished—possibly because of eyes which contradicted the hair, refusing to be old or even elderly. For the rest, she had good taste, good manners, modestly sufficient income, rather a pretty wit, and a very kind heart. Twenty years a widow she might several times have changed her name and estate to great worldly advantage. That she had refrained spoke no exceptional constancy to the dead—rather a whimsical joy in ordering her life strictly according to her own pleasure.

Her position was so assured. She refused to be "in society"—society even with the capital letter often entreated her to come out and play with it. Such times as she went, swathed and filmy, she never played wallflower—if she danced rarely it, was of choice, not necessity. She preferred dinners to dances for several reasons, but had vagaries of choice among them. The Windsors, for example, sinfully rich, old and even close friends, found it next to impossible to have her at their big gatherings—because she knew they would "feature" her—and she loathed being featured. A great man, you see, had said after encountering her, "She is the most amusing person in all New York." After that, she might have had a fine, indirect retainer from the Windsors to keep on being amusing—but the role did not in the least appeal to her.

Power abode with the Windsors—social, political, financial. They could make or break—and, being kindly, loved making better than breaking. So Mrs. Lane, who never pulled wires for herself, felt no compunction against bringing them in contact with the young Marshes, who had come from the provinces, bringing letters to her from her husband's people. An engaging couple—well bred and good to look at. Ambitious, too—Jemmy at the law, with a slant toward politics. Lucilla at her art—a very fine art of cookery. They could be helped by the Windsors, Mrs. Lane decided. If they could meet she could feel happily quit of responsibility for them. At the small dinner she gave for them, asking only the potential patrons, with Judge Benton to balance herself, things went so beautifully it was with a light heart she accepted Mme. Windsor's invitation, not to a grand spread, but to a particular and intimate dinner that meant much more.

Judge her dismay when Jemmy appeared in that state of amorous inebriety that will make love to a broomstick, provided it wears a petticoat. The Marshes were next to last arrivals—she stood waiting for the tardy escort, the judge, when Jemmy possessed himself of her hand, kissed it and said, with a languishing glance: "I've been living for this all day." She understood—he would ruin everything unless she threw herself into the breech, sacrificed her evening and kept the poor spud from making a pretty spectacle of himself.

Judge Benton was coming to claim her—she gave him an entreating look, laid her hand upon Jemmy's arm and steered him safely toward the feast. There, by dint of woman's art, she managed to keep him decently quiet and so to maneuver that after dinner he did not leave her.

More than once she sent soul wireless to Lucilla, bidding her keep heart. Lucilla was dumb and dull. She would not join the pair, do what Mrs. Lane might, nor show the least interest in anything or anybody else. Mrs. Windsor was less obdurate. She had stared faintly with pursed lips throughout dinner, but when Friend Frances drew her within range of Jemmy's fascinating tongue made him tell stories of back home in a voice that was music's own, she thawed visibly. Enough to mention the opera and her box—though quite vaguely.

Even nightmares end, so did this dreadful evening. Mrs. Lane, her face hot at thought of it all, nodded to her image saying: "Never again. I am forever done with good deeds; tired of suffering for my virtues. As for the Marshes, I wipe them off the slate."

She meant it, but fate had a trick of rewriting slates. Next day but one, Lucilla all but forced her way in, white and drawn of face, her eyes red with weeping.

"I—have—come to—to give him up—to you," she said without prelude. "I am going back—as soon as possible. I will give him his divorce—"

"Explain, please," Mrs. Lane demanded in her great manner. Lucilla wept loudly. "You—you can face me—and say that—when you have taken—more than my li-i-fe," she howled. "And I trusted you—thought you were safe—and old."

"I am," said Mme. Frances, suppressing a smile. Then, by dint of cross-examination that would have been creditable to Judge Benton, she got at the truth—Lucilla had taxed Jemmy roundly with his "infatuation"—he had smilingly admitted her charge—having fortified himself afresh with a long drink of Windsor Scotch in the dressing room. Then laughing loudly, he had bidden his weeping one not to be a fool—the combat thickened—after two hours of it he had whisked out, slamming the door hard behind him. The rest was blank silence and emptiness. Lucilla had stood it as long as possible, then descended upon the home-wrecker to shame her with her own magnanimity. "I'm going to leave a letter to him—with you," she said at the end. "I don't want to make trouble for him at the office—and I know he won't come—home—gulping over the word—"unless you make him."

Mrs. Lane no longer felt like smiling. Indeed, there was a choke in her throat as she asked: "Couldn't you see the state he was in? And that I was just playing safe for both of you?"

"But—you swapped Judge Benton for him—I heard the other women talking how strange it was—he is such a catch, and everybody saying you've tried to catch him," Lucilla said obstinately. "Maybe—you couldn't help it—either of you—but oh, oh, I wish I could d—die right now."

Half an hour at the phone brought results. Judge Benton took the case—he had seen enough to need scant explanation. He rounded up Jemmy in great shape, routing him out of the hotel where he was drowning his troubles in many hours of solid sleep—which had washed away all memory of his emotional lapse. So when he was brought to Lucilla "like torrents from a mountain source they rushed into each other's arms." And let us hope they lived happy ever after.

FALLEN FROM HIGH ESTATE

Unfortunate Stag Well Knew He Was Not in Condition to Be Leader of Herd.

Two of us were resting in the shade at the end of a portage, taking in the loveliness of the clear mountain lake before us, when with not a rustle of the herbiage, out popped a deer into the shallows, not fifty feet from where we were sitting. It was a three-year-old stag, his antlers still in velvet, thick and cumbersome, although they should have been scouring and hardening at that time. Such a miserably ragged, thin and forlorn specimen he was. Evidently he had been badly injured in some way, one shoulder and leg dragged badly. We watched him drink and saw him walk off slowly across the sandy bottomed little bay, and into the alder swamp on the other side. He was perfectly dispirited, and not greatly in love with life just then. "He has pulled down his flag, poor chap," I said to my companion as we resumed our normal breathing after his disappearance. "Did you notice that he did not show his white plumed tail?" "Well, why should he?" said my friend. "Yes, why should he?" I answered. "He is no leader to be followed now. Not for him to signal 'Press where you see my white plume gleam,' for he is no safe guide to does and fawns in his present condition.

PENS LONG USED

Writing Instruments Are of Great Antiquity.

Records Prove They Are as Old as the Sword—Constructed of Many Materials.

The pen is one of the oldest instruments men use. Whether or not it is mightier than the sword, as Bulwer Lytton makes the great French cardinal exclaim in the play of "Richelieu," it is perhaps of as great antiquity as the sword. It is not as old as stone-headed war clubs or stone axes, but it seems to date back to the beginning of men's knowledge of metals and their alloys. As soon as men got the idea of inscribing symbols on stones as representing things or words, they used an iron instrument which was the parent, or the ancestor, of the pen. There were pens of iron and bronze and reeds, and later the quills of feathers.

The Assyrian kings and scribes and the Phoenecians 2,000 years before Christ proclaimed their dynasties with decrees written with pens made from reeds and feathers. The early Greeks inscribed their letters with a stylus, but the later Greeks wrote with the quills of geese, crows, hawks and eagles. Pens of brass and silver were in use in Rome at the beginning of the Christian era.

The stylus with which many of the Greeks and Romans wrote was something like an iron bodkin and it came to be used so often in brawls that it was prohibited—that is, men were prohibited to use a stylus. The bodkin in old English times was no doubt a big darning or knitting needle and Hamlet had that instrument in mind when he said: "When he his quietus might make with a bare bodkin."

There are various references in the Bible to pens. In the Book of Judges, the fifth chapter and the fourteenth verse, is this: "Out of Machir came down governors, and out of Zebulum they that handle the pen of the writer." In I Kings, the twenty-first chapter, in the matter of Ahab, Jesebel and Naboth it is written: "So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth." In the nineteenth chapter of Job, the twenty-third and twenty-fourth verses, is this: "Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in rock forever!" The eighth chapter of Isaiah begins, Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen concerning Maher-shalal-hash-bas." In the Third Epistle of John occurs this: "I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write to thee."

Pens of steel, gold and silver appeared in Great Britain, France and America about 1800 but they were very slow in gaining favor. They were expensive, clumsy and not as satisfactory as the quill. But the quill had reached the limit in the nicety with which it could be pointed and the gold and steel pens continued to be improved in their smoothness and flexibility. The first fountain pen was patented about 1830 and the number of patents granted on fountain pens now reaches into the thousands.

Chilean Grapes Imported.

An experimental shipment of grapes was sent from Chile to New York, with a view of ascertaining whether a market could be found in the United States for the product of the Chilean vineyards. The grapes were shipped in cold storage and are reported to have arrived in excellent condition, and to have been sold at highly satisfactory prices. It is reported that another shipment is planned as soon as arrangements can be made. The experiment is of particular interest, since it is possible that the exportation of fresh fruit from Chile to the United States might become very profitable, providing shipping facilities were available. Chile produces fine fruit of almost every variety known to the temperate zone, and it ripens during the winter months in the United States, when the market would be at its best.

The Little Story That's True

THE RAILROADS

Hello! Mr. Editor. I am not dead and have only been sleeping, vacationing, etc. I will apologize by beginning where I left off some weeks ago.

Considerable criticism is extant these days concerning the railroads, high freight rates, etc., and like many others of our vital economic questions, the remedy is not easily seen and the criticisms, for the most part, are not constructive. However, some of the reasons for the failure of the railroads to meet the situation are self-evident to those more or less familiar with the "inside" of railroading. One cause of failure is best illustrated by an incident which occurred a few years ago on a small Ohio railroad. An old Irish section foreman was being questioned by the general manager of the road about the causes of the very noticeable depreciation in the road bed and the "run down" condition of things in general. In answer, the old foreman made this significant reply: "Well, y'see Misther ——, It's this way. We usta' have wooden cyars, an' iron min. Now we have iron cyars and wooden min." And that summed up in a few words, gives a fair idea of what has been going on, on the railroads. With an ever increasing traffic, heavier cars and heavier motive power, has come a weakening in the morale of the railroad labor forces. The railroad labor in the past, I believe can be characterized as among the most loyal and it is little wonder that the railroads of the United States were enabled to build up a reputation at home and abroad for being the most efficient not only in speed of transportation, but also in lowness of cost per ton mile on freight. This was possible largely because of the loyalty and the low pay of their labor forces. That of course is changed today and the labor on the railroads is fairly well paid. It now remains to be seen whether or not the public is willing that this equitable remuneration shall continue. By insisting on lower freight rates at this time will mean a consequent reduction in railroad workers' pay.

This is, by no means, the only cause of increased cost in transportation. Probably one of the most fruitful causes of this increased cost has been the withdrawal of legitimate patronage and the consequent loss of tonnage. The motor truck has been instrumental in taking away thousands and thousands of tons of freight which by all means should have been transported by rail. And everybody would have been better off for it. As it now is, the railroads must have a higher freight in order to live and the taxpayer has to pay for the depreciation of the streets and highways over which this subsidized truck traffic has been handled. License fees on trucks do not begin to cover the extreme destruction to our highways entailed in this mode of transportation. The country is not thickly populated enough to support both railroads and truck roads.

The same condition obtains in the city where the automobile and bus lines are attracting the legitimate patronage from the street car lines. It is the writer's humble opinion that no bus line should be tolerated upon our streets where the automobile traffic is already congested at times. This is purely a community question, and should be looked at in a dispassionate light. Withdrawal of patronage from the street cars, only makes it necessary for that company or utility to charge each individual who is compelled to ride, an increased fare. At best, the bus line as mode of transportation is only temporary and will disappear like a "will-o'-the-wisp" when the first heavy snow comes. Then the old reliable street car company will sweep our streets and "keep open the arteries of traffic." Let's consider the street railways and railroads as our own "to have and to hold" and support them.

Paper Movies.

Paper instead of celluloid for movies is being tried abroad, it is said, at a tremendous saving of expense, and little decrease in excellence. Opaque paper may be used many times without wearing away. Such a revolution in cost is desirable, of course, but if clear photographs can be made through paper we shall be surprised. The materials of which paper is made may be made translucent to ordinary vision, but hardly transparent; although the light rays now in control of men achieve wonders through obstacles the natural sight of man cannot pierce.

Rubber for Tires.

Nearly 600,000,000 pounds of crude rubber were used last year in the manufacture of automobile tires in America. Of this immense total Brazil contributed more than 58,000,000 pounds, the Dutch East Indies an equal or slightly larger amount, and the British Straits Settlements nearly five times as much as either of the other places named. In addition supplies were drawn from the Belgian Congo, French Africa, Venezuela, Mexico, Peru and Panama.—Brooklyn Eagle.

There is no part of the world where the movement toward Christianity is so strong as in Nigeria. In one year there were more adult baptisms in Nigeria than in the whole of India, Ceylon and China put together. Goose Girls Still Exist.

The goose girl doesn't exist only in fairy stories. She is still a reality in Germany, says the Kansas City Star. One of the departments of the bureau of child welfare put a small notice into the papers a few weeks ago saying that boys and girls from fourteen to sixteen years old, who had left school, but were, by reason of ill-health or of scarcity of labor, unable to get work, would be sent to farms for the summer, where they would have plenty of good food and fresh air in return for such light work as tending geese and [illegible].

A thousand or more children applied in the next few days and were sent to the homes of farmers who made known their wants through the offices and representatives of the child welfare work in various small towns and villages. Many of the children are those who have for long suffered from undernourishment, and all of them have been saved a summer of fruitless searching for work or loafing about on city streets.

Novelists' Wealth.

The wills of two popular authors have just been published, one being that of Mrs. Florence Louise Barclay and the other that of Mr. Ernest William Hornung. Mrs. Barclay, the writer of "The Rosary," "The Mistress of Shenstone," and "The Broken Halo," left property of the value of $169,000 with net personality of $100,000. The whole of the estate is bequeathed to her husband, the Rev. Charles Wright Barclay. Mr. Hornung, the creator of "Raffles," left $56,000 gross. He bequeathed his literary works and copyrights and the residue of the property to his wife who is a sister of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, for life, and then to his children.

FIGURES LARGELY IN BIBLE

Askalon Mentioned Many Times as a City of Some Importance—Has Long Been Buried.

Askalon is mentioned in the Bible many times. Judges tell of its capture by Judah when the Hebrew children swept across the Jordan from the desert. But it was recaptured. Samson operated in its neighborhood, killing in the city the 30 young men who had induced his Philistine wife (not Delilah, but her predecessor) to betray the answer to his famous riddle, and thus caused Samson to lose a bet. Zeponiah foresaw that Askalon would come to a bad end, "for Gaza would be forsaken and Askalon a desolation." And no one can forget the lamentation of David over the defeat and death of Saul, his king, and Jonathan, his soul-brother, which opens: "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askalon lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice."

In the Twelfth century Richard Coeur de Lion partly rebuilt the Askalon fortress, and William of Tyre, the historian of the Crusaders, describes the town. But it was lost beneath layers of sand until the work of excavation began, and in the great war it was for a long time the advance post of the British expedition. Its slow emergence brings back ancient days and shows again how accurate is the Bible as a book of history.

Nothing Unusual.

A sentry post atop the Rock of Gib, has standing orders to report anything unusual which occurs. One night a soldier walking near this post, fell over the side, dropped 1,000 feet and quite naturally was killed. The body was recovered the next morning by the shore patrol. All of the men who had been on duty the night before were called up before S. O. P. and questioned regarding the incident.

One sentry boldly admitted having seen the man killed.

"Why didn't you report this immediately?"

"Well, sir, my orders are to report anything unusual and I couldn't see where there was anything unusual about a man being killed after he falls a thousand feet!"—Far Seas.

J. Arthur McCann, 26, residing at the home of his uncle, Rolland E. Millisor, 171 South Burgess avenue, was killed and three companions were hurt, one seriously, when an automobile in which they were riding, skidded and turned over five miles east of London, Sunday.

The accident followed an attempt to pass another machine traveling in the same direction, headed for Columbus, while traveling 40 miles an hour.

In an effort to summon aid, McCann, it is said, crawled approximately 500 feet to reach a telephone before he died. Other victims were taken from the wreck by autoists, who came up shortly after the accident happened.

McCann leaves a brother, James McCann, North Twentieth street, and one son, Chester Arthur McCann.

The Lust for Speed.

According to L'Air, France is still concerned with the problem of producing speed airplanes capable of defeating the existing world's speed records, the laws of resistance, and possibly the abilities of the best pilot to land on any airdrome smaller than the Gobi desert. It is stated that in a certain number of new monoplanes, possessed of engines of anything up to 600-horsepower, thick wings, retractable undercarriages, and the absence of outside bracing, the constructors are hoping for a speed of 220 miles per hour, with a mere landing speed of anything over 125 miles per hour. The firms concerned are Nieuport, Spad and Hanriot, and it is hoped that their efforts, at any rate to produce a really fast machine, will give rise to some remarkable constructions.—Scientific American.

Latest Form of Briquettes.

Briquettes, in the form of cones weighing about 6½ pounds, are made by a new Danish machine from the chips from turning, boring and filing in ordinary machine shop work. The material is forced into molds by compressed air power. The briquettes can be employed in the proportion of 15 per cent and upward for ordinary iron castings or for special castings such as engine cylinders and are claimed not only to produce tough and compact castings of greater strength than when pig and scrap iron are used alone, but also to provide a convenient means of adding silicon and mang nese to the metals.

Moore's Everlasting Firepot

The United States goverment declaares that soft coal contains within 6 per cent as much heating power as hard coal, and would be just as valuable for heating if the gas could be burned. Its statistics show:

"A bushel of hard coal contains 6 per cent volatile carbon or gas, 82 per cent fixed carbon or coke, making a total of 88 per cent heating power.

"A bushel of soft coal contains 3: per cent volatile carbon or gas, 44 per cent fixed carbon or coke, making a total of 82 per cent heating power.

In ordinary stoves it has never been possible to burn the gas of soft coal, and the greater part of its heating power has been lost

Moore's Everlasting Firepot with which Moore's Air-Tight Heater is equipped if constructed specially to burn all the gas the smoke and the soot of soft coal, making it as valuable for heat as hard coal.

Perpendic ular flues extend from the top, and completely surround the fire pot on the outside.

Furnished Flat to Let

By FREDERICK HART

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Carlisle Henderson read the advertisement again. It seemed worth while investigating, even though he had followed up many promising trails only to find that they ended in disappointment. Still, this was what he wanted—if only it was like what it said it was:

"48th St., 44 West—Completely furnished apartment; 3 rooms, bath, kitchen, elevator, telephone. All conveniences; $100. Sublet till October."

He clipped the scrap of paper from the journal in which he had found it, put it carefully in his wallet, and started out on the trail once more. For two weeks he had sought a place to live, and had found the various alluring advertisements snares and delusions. Either they were not what he wanted, or else they charged enormous prices for ridiculously inadequate rooms. He had not much hope; but an inner urge prompted him to follow up this lead. It might be the thing—and the price was certainly low enough! Most of them wanted nearly double that sum for an unfurnished barn of a place. . . . The bus carried him up the avenue to the cross street he sought. He rang the bell and as the unwieldy vehicle slowed he swung expertly from the steps. A short walk westward brought him to the number.

From the outside the place looked bright and clean. Big windows, he noted approvingly; the apartments on the lower floors, which were occupied, showed glimpses of tastefully furnished rooms—not the green-plush-and-golden-oak horrors among which he had lived for so many weeks. He mounted the steps and rang the bell.

A trim maid answered the bell. He produced the clipping.

"Two flights up," she said. "Just knock—apartment 24."

He climbed the stairs. They were wide, deep-carpeted, quiet. The whole house breathed an air of refinement. And there was a three-room apartment here for rent at $100 a month! His mind instinctively took up suspicions. There must be something wrong with the place at that price. Perhaps there were conditions attached—certainly it couldn't be very nice. . . . Still he had come a long way, and there was no use in backing out now—he might as well see it. Another flight of stairs, and he was standing before apartment 24.

There was no card in the little holder, but a gleaming brass knocker invited use. He rapped tentatively. Footsteps sounded on the other side of the door, and in a moment the handle turned, and he was bade a cheerful "come in!"

The light of the room after the dimness of the hallway dazzled his eyes for a moment, and he could not make out the features of the girl who confronted him. He noted that she was small and slim, and dressed in a businesslike suit of dark material; then his eyes roved about the beautiful little apartment with its wicker furniture, its comfortable looking couch, the shaded electric lights. It was what he wanted, all right. . . . his eyes returned to the girl, and he saw that she was standing with her back against the wall, one hand clenched at her side, the other at her throat. He saw that her face was white—and then he saw that he knew her.

"Alice!" It was a mere whisper. The shock of surprise nearly stunned him. "Alice—you—how did you get here?"

"Carlisle, I—" The words came with difficulty. "I came last year. I—I've been painting—not very well, I'm afraid—" with a little nervous laugh. "At least, no one wants to buy my pictures. I had a little money, but it's nearly all gone, so I had to sublet this place. Did you see my advertisement in the paper?"

"Yes, I saw it—but—Alice—I—do you remember when I last saw you?"

She looked away.

Dogs Trained to Smuggle.

The Franco-Belgian frontier has long been a happy hunting ground of the smuggler, both amateur and professional. In the customs museum at Lille is a collection of exhibits which give a vivid idea of the tricks employed by smugglers.

There are chairs, brushes, pitchforks, masons' hods, widows' mourning bonnets, wheelbarrows, saws and boots, all hollowed out for stowing away tobacco. There are stacks of government papers concealed in a zinc tobacco receptacle, hollow roulette wheels in which coffee was smuggled, and workmen's drinking cans with only a few inches of liquor in a little vessel beneath the cork, the rest of the can being intended for tobacco.

There are numerous examples of spiked armor, spiked collars and harness furnished with a number of sharp spears, worn by the dogs trained to dash across from Belgium at night, and thus protected against the customs dogs trained to chase them.

Equals Twenty Tunnels.

The two enormous masonry-faced steel towers supporting the contemplated bridge connecting Manhattan with Jersey City will each of them be 840 feet high, or 46 feet taller than the Woolworth building.

The upper deck of the bridge, over which will flow all the automobile and motortruck traffic, will accommodate as many moving vehicles as ten two-track tubes such as the pair soon to be built under the Hudson river at Canal street, at a cost of $150,000,000.

The lower deck will carry ten railroad tracks.

The bridge is expected to cost $110,000,000. Tunnels under the river, equivalent to the bridge in traffic capacity, would, it is estimated, cost two and a half times as much. Not fewer than 20 of them would be required.

Swallowed Cigaret Holder.

Loo Va Lee, a Chinese boy of ten, was taken to the Shanghai hospital, a few weeks ago after "swallowing" a cigaret holder 2½ inches long, ⅝ inches in diameter at the wider end and ¼ inch at the lower end, with a linen band ⅛ inch in diameter. Examination showed that this object had lodged in his windpipe and that all his breathing was being done through it. An effort to get hold of the cigaret holder with forceps and pull it out failed, so the surgeon opened the boy's throat, got hold of the lower end and withdrew it that way.

Give the Boy a Chance.

"What have you named your baby, Hamish?"

"Sam Pro Tem Johnson, sah."

"What's the Pro Tem for?"

"To show that the name is only temporary, sah. We kinder thought Sam might like to choose his own name when he growed up, so we put in de Pro Tem as a warning to de public."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

MAKES NEW BED

River Indus Changes Its Course With Regularity.

Inhabitants of Waziristan Face Perpetual Peril, as Water Constantly Moves in a New Direction.

The frequently heard news that an eastern river has changed its course with danger to property and life seems incredible until one has actually seen an active river "getting busy" on a new course, writes a correspondent from Waziristan, India.

Thus the Indus is a perpetual problem, and for this reason: All provisions must cross its broad waters, as Waziristan is on the west bank and in desert country.

Every October the river hibernates, and a bridge of boats temporarily solves the problem.

But each May it wakes up, shakes itself out of its sleep and probably out of its original course.

The bridge is hurriedly dismantled, and there ensues anxious speculation among the engineers.

Which way is the water coming?

After observations and soundings the new position of the port, quaintly called "Steamer Point," is fixed. There follows a procession of railway men, provision experts, coolies (laborers) and camels. Lines are laid, "dumps" arise and within a week the erstwhile lonely river bank is populated and becomes a "going concern."

Even then a wary eye has to be kept on the encroaching waters. Both the railway and the supply "dumps" have to be moved farther and farther back. Sometimes even in a single night the river will flow away into a new and unexpected channel; or, maybe, it will forsake a portion of its bed, leaving a yellow sandbank in its place.

The bank itself becomes jagged like a piece of bread into which a child has made large bites.

The water swirls ever inward and cracks appear ten feet within the bank; the cracks deepen, and without warning another large lump of shore crumbles away. A motor car that stopped on such a piece disappeared into the river and has not been seen since.

And some of these effects are curious.

A cluster of three palm trees, which were well away from the water last week, were little islands yesterday. This morning they had disappeared: Probably they are miles down the stream for the current is swift and gives no quarter.

You may imagine these quiet trees, torn from their native soil, turning feverishly round and round at the mercy of the sweeping current.

The flotsam and jetsam of life and death go eddying past on the bosom of the stream. Here a dead camel, there a bevy of jam tins catches the eye and fades away downstream.

Yet with all the turmoil and trouble the Indus has a charm of its own, and it is most fascinating to watch the work of elemental nature.

This evening, as I saw the bank collapsing bit by bit, I could not help thinking of the story of the engineer who built his bungalow a comfortable mile from the river. The next year the water was lapping at his garden gate.

And I wondered if in a year or two the river would threaten our own little homesteads away back in the distance.

Is President of Assyria.

Just as George Washington in America became known to posterity as the "Father of His Country," the first woman president of a nation may be known as the "Mother of Assyria." Lady Surma, first executive of the new Assyrian republic, practically created the nation when she obtained from England the grant of 60,000 square miles of land in the Kurdistan mountains, and this, it is said in London, may win her the unique title.

Lady Surma was ambassador to England from the Assyrians—and incidentally the first woman ambassador in the world—when she obtained the grant of the new territory from Britain. Her brother, Mar Chinon, had been patriarch of the Assyrians, and following his murder a new form of government was outlined. When the new assembly of the Assyrians was organized, the ambassador who won for the country its new territory was at once urged for its ruler.

Lady Surma was educated by British tutors and is an accomplished linguist.

Arabic Literature Recovering.

Arabic literature, writes a correspondent to the London Morning Post, is recovering from a period of depression induced by the war. Of the books published during the last month or so one of the most interesting is "Nawadir al-Harb," containing rare and interesting comments on the war—rare in the sense that every fact is narrated from the standpoint of the Oriental philosopher. The little volume closes with appropriate comments on the powers and their post-war conditions culled from the works of the classical Arabic poets. Perhaps the most amusing passage is that which is selected for Montenegro: "I have sold my house and my donkey; I have, therefore, nothing above or beneath me."

DEMAND BEST ONE CAN GIVE

Practically Nothing That Is Worth Having Can Be Attained Without the Greatest Effort.

It is easy to sit and watch others work. But we know of no employer who will pay you wages for doing it, unless you know how to do the work yourself, and are working hard at the job of supervising it.

It is easy to travel about the world on steamships and parlor cars, very pleasant and profitable to the man with an inquiring mind. But that is a vacation occupation, and unless you have earned the money to do it by hard work you will get little out of it.

It is easiest of all to feel sorry for yourself, and to think that you haven't had a fair chance in life, and that you'd have been a big success if you hadn't met with so much injustice and bad treatment. But that will get you only unhappiness, which is the least desirable thing in all the world.

There are many things in life that are well worth doing, but none of them are easy.

The first-class fiction writer takes delight in his job, but he also works at it harder than any man who is not a first-class fiction writer or ever dreams of doing.

The great tenor, like Caruso, finds pleasure in his job, and incidentally in the money he gets from it. But he works about six or seven hours a day at it now, and in earlier life he worked ten or twelve hours, receiving far less pay for exactly as good music.

If good jobs were to be had by little effort practically everybody would have a good job. The reason that they are so few, and that so many of those few are not filled, is that all of them demanded the hardest kind of hard work, not only to get but to keep them.

Genius, which is said to know how to do things before it is born, has to work just as hard as mediocrity to gain and keep success. Nothing you can think of that brings real rewards can be accomplished without more work than most of us can contemplate without getting tired at the mere thought of it. Yet people are doing it right along, and you seldom hear of any of them killing themselves in the effort.

If you have made up your mind to do something unusual or to be somebody of importance learn how to work twice as hard as you ever did before.

That is only a first step. The second is to think hard. If you can do both, and keep them up long enough, you may land, but remember you will have a lot of competition. Even hard work finds plenty of men to believe in and practice it.

And most of them get what they are after.

"Yes, I—I remember," she said at last.

"Well, I want to say—why didn't you answer my letters?"

"I—I don't know. I was hurt, Carlisle—hurt and proud. Oh, I was wicked not to write! I know it now. And then you stopped writing, and I couldn't stand it any longer. And I came here to work—and to forget. And now you come here!"

"Alice—Alice, dear, I want to ask your pardon for the things I said and did that night."

With a little cry she flung herself into his arms.

"Oh, Carlisle, Carlisle, it's I who should ask pardon. I was wrong—hopelessly, bitterly wrong—and I see it now. I saw it months ago, but I couldn't bring myself to write. And then you changed your address, and I couldn't find you again. And I was so miserable. Carlisle, dear, won't you kiss me and say that it's all right?"

"Alice, it never was anything but all right. I've found you now and I don't intend to let you go. Let's let bygones be bygones, and not think any more of that bad old time. You're mine now, and you'll never get away again."

There was silence for a moment. Then she raised her head from his arms.

"You're not going to leave me?"

"Never! You must keep this apartment. By the way, how did you come to advertise it at such a crazy price? It's worth twice that, furnished as it is."

She blushed. "I'll confess. I didn't know where you were and I couldn't find your address, but I met a girl the other day who said she knew you were hunting for a place to live, so I advertised at such a price that I was sure you'd come to investigate. I've had that ad in all the papers for a week, and I've had the most fearful time telling everybody who came that the place was taken. But I was sure you'd come."

A rap at the door interrupted them. Alice opened and admitted a large man who puffed from his stair-climbing exertions.

"I see you've got a place to sublet," he began; "can I look at it?"

Before Alice could answer Carlisle stepped forward.

"I'm sorry, sir," he said. "The place [illegible]"

ROUSED INTEREST OF CHINESE

Appearance of White Traveler Led to Good-Natured Inquisition by Curious Farmers.

A foreign devil—the pleasant Chinese name for all persons of another race—is a rare sight in the interior villages of China; in some he is still known only by hearsay. The European or the American traveler who first enters a remote village excites much the same interest as "the wild man of Borneo" excites in a country town here. In Travel Mr. William A. Anderson tells how the natives of a certain village in North China received him and incidentally how he was the means of dispelling a most injurious rumor about the Anglo-Saxon knee joint.

Seated upon an old millstone in a shaded corner of the yard, he says, I became the object of a good-natured inquisition by the curious farmers, who casually came to me in ones and in twos until they felt it safe to be bold. Then an old man, wrinkled like the neck of a turtle and with eyes twinkling with humor and curiosity, darted forth an inquisitive hand and pinched me with his bony fingers. Instinctively I tightened my muscle, and he emitted a long and appreciative "Ah!" I was then politely requested to rise and sit down again. The request was made with such gentle earnestness that I complied.

"Ah!" said the old man again, nodding with satisfaction, "I thought it was a lie."

"What is the meaning of that?" I asked.

"I have always been told," he explained with a deprecatory air, "that foreigners had no joints in their knees. I see now that it must be a mistake, because you can bend yours."

My willingness to enlighten them made us all friends instantly, and they advanced upon me to examine my garments, remove my sun helmet to test its weight, try the leather of my shoes by scratching them, unbutton my coat to see if I wore an undershirt, ask the price of my clothes and enter into a violent altercation as to their advantage over native garments.—Youth's Companion.

Not Obsolete.

Admiral Sims said at a dinner party in New York:

"Youth is always an extremist. Take, for instance, the battleship question. We middle-aged sailors are just now asking ourselves how much the submarine has impaired the value of the battleship, but youth has got the question settled for good and all.

"'What is the value of the battleship today?' I said to a naval cadet at a luncheon.

"'No damned value at all,' he answered.

"Then he thought a moment and added:

"'Of course, she's got a very nice [illegible]"

The basis of the Girl Scout organization is the individual girl. Any one girl on the Hilltop who wishes to enroll under our own simple pledge of loyalty to God and country, helpfulness to other people and obedience to the Scout laws, is privileged to become a Girl Scout.

The ideal unit and the keystone of the organization is the patrol, consisting of eight girls who would naturally be associated as friends, neighbors, school fellows or playmates. They are a self-selected and under the regulations and customs of the organization, a self-governing little body who learn through practical experiment, how to translate into democratic team-play, their recreation, patriotic or community work, camp life and athletics. Definite mastery of the various subjects they select to study is made more interesting by healthy competition and mental observation.

The girls had a jovial time at the last meeting, "Come and get acquainted, if you feel a little lonely or your friends are too few."

The next meeting is to be held at 163 South Warren avenue, Friday, September 30, 7:30 p. m. Call Hilltop 355 for further information.—Irene N. Slagle, Scout Leader.

The Farm That Wouldn't Sell

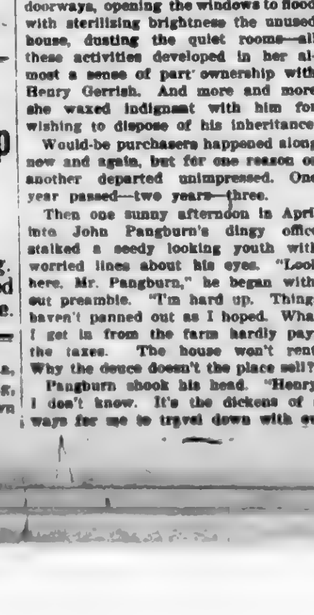
By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

© 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.



"Then it is understood, Miss Andrews, that you will keep an eye on the place and show it to prospective buyers. I might add that in addition to your fee as caretaker Mr. Gerrish will allow you a nominal commission if the farm is disposed of through your efforts." Lawyer John Pangburn buttoned his fur coat snugly about him and turned away.

A touch on his arm arrested him. "It's rather a pity, isn't it," Margaret Andrews questioned him, "for the last of the Gerrishes to let the property go out of the family?"

"Yes, young lady," admitted Pangburn, "it is, undoubtedly. But, lord, these young chaps nowadays—what's a few acres and a bunch of cows compared to the subway rush and the bright white lights? Henry seems to think he can set Wall street on fire with the proceeds from the sale of the farm. However, good-day, Miss Andrews." Abruptly he checked his comments on what was undoubtedly his client's own business.

Left alone, Margaret watched her recent visitor's car grow smaller and smaller along the ribbon of road that threaded the Woodbridge hills. But her thoughts were elsewhere—with old Henry Gerrish, who a few days before had gone to join his fathers on the hill; with young Henry Gerrish, whom she had never seen until the day of the funeral, and then only at a distance as he stood muffled in his coat, head bent, beside his father's grave.

For Henry had gone out to an uncle ranching it in the West some months before Margaret's arrival in Woodbridge and had not come home until summoned by the death of his father. There had followed idle speculation in the neighborhood as to Henry's intentions regarding the farm. Would he follow his father's and grandfather's footsteps? Today those queries had been answered, for Henry, immediately after the brief reading of his father's will, had instructed Pangburn to put the old homestead on the market.

"Can't You See It?"

As time passed, however, and the place remained unsold, Margaret came to feel for it a continually increasing fondness. Watching the spring sowing of fields rented to a neighbor, tending the small flower gardens about the doorways, opening the windows to flood with sterilizing brightness the unused house, dusting the quiet rooms—all these activities developed in her almost a sense of part ownership with Henry Gerrish. And more and more she waxed indignant with him for wishing to dispose of his inheritance.

Would-be purchasers happened along now and again, but for one reason or another departed unimpressed. One year passed—two years—three.

Then one sunny afternoon in April into John Pangburn's dingy office stalked a seedy looking youth with worried lines about his eyes. "Look here, Mr. Pangburn," he began without preamble. "I'm hard up. Things haven't panned out as I hoped. What I get in from the farm hardly pays the taxes. The house won't rent. Why the deuce doesn't the place sell?"

Pangburn shook his head. "Henry, I don't know. It's the dickens of a ways for me to travel down with every Tom, Dick and Harry, but I've wondered sometimes—do you suppose that that Miss Andrews guesses the deal? She'll lose her little income if she sells the farm."

Henry nodded. "Guess you've hit it. And she stands to get the commission in the end. Listen, now—I've an idea. The girl doesn't know me. Send me down to look it over as a buyer and I'll size up the situation."

"Good scheme," said Pangburn, "a confounded good scheme!"

Three days later Margaret slipped a letter into its envelope, sighing as she did so. "Sounds like business this time," she said to herself. "I'm afraid that idiot Henry Gerrish is going to lose his gold mine."

That afternoon across the fields the last of the Gerrishes (pro tem.) followed in amazement Margaret's slim figure and marveled at the words which fell from her lips. How unfair had Pangburn been!

"Can't you see it?" she was demanding. "Those forty acres in corn, the west twenty in alfalfa, that swamp drained for celery, the timber lot cleared and yielding a little ready cash, good utility stock in the chicken runs, a few grade cows to start with—"

"This line of talk," mused Henry to himself, bewildered, "should have nailed every customer." Aloud. "I wonder why the present owner doesn't keep it?" he said. "Why does he sell?"

"Because," said Margaret promptly, "he's an idiot!"

"Oh," said Henry thoughtfully. "I see."

On his return to town Henry cast a bombshell at Pangburn's feet. "Heavens, man," he cried. "She made the place so darned attractive I'm going to farm it myself!"

One year from the day she met him Margaret Andrews married Henry Gerrish and came back from the little Woolbridge church to the old house she had tended. Standing on the south veranda in the mellow air of an Indian summer twilight, watching the lights twinkle out in her parents' home on the hill a quarter of a mile away, she and her husband fell to talking of the circumstances which had brought them together.

"Funny," ruminated Henry, "old Pangburn thought maybe the place didn't sell because you ran it down, or something of the sort."

Margaret was silent a moment. Then, "Maybe," she confessed slowly, "he was right. You see, I hated to see old Henry Gerrish's son squander the work of years and generations. Not that I ever actually said anything—only, well, I could have been more enthusiastic!"

"But why," demanded Henry, puzzled, "did you praise it to the skies to me? You didn't know it was me—"

"Didn't I?" laughed his bride of an hour. "Do you suppose, Henry Gerrish, I could dust the photograph of a man with a dimple in his left cheek every few days for three years and not recognize him when I saw him?"

Climate of South America.

All of South America north of Rio de Janeiro lies within the tropics. South America, in contrast with North America, has a remarkably equable climate. In the northern portion the intense heat is greatly modified by the altitude, while the southern portion is free from sudden changes because of the nearness of the ocean and the influence of the mountains. The temperature during mid-winter averages about 80 degrees Fahrenheit in the north and 55 in the south; during midsummer it averages about 85 degrees in the north and 50 in the south. The lowlands along the Orinoco and the Amazon and the coast of Brazil have a hot clime and a high degree of humidity. Summer occurs there in December, January and February, and winter in June, July and August. The rainfall is heaviest in the Amazon basin, where it averages 50 to 75 inches a year, but reaches in some parts 200 inches and more. It diminishes gradually toward the south, until the arid region, constituting a large part of Argentina and most of Patagonia, is reached.

Were Not Up to Date.

Recently a writer in the American Forestry Magazine was addressing a large audience of New England people, and asked how many knew the location of Lafayette National park. Not a single hand was raised. Yet Lafayette park is the only national park in New England, a gift of land by public-spirited residents of Mt. Desert island, off the coast of Maine.

A Traitress.

"Why do the other women on the block look down on Mrs. Flubdub?"

"She keeps her husband's white shoes clean."

Love Laughs at Motors

By FREDERICK HART.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"I'm afraid the car's hopelessly broken down," said Richard Harris to his companion, Winifred Davis. "I can't seem to make anything go."

"But, Dick! What'll we do? We can't stay here—and it's getting late."

Winifred was anxious. She knew from the country that they were a long way from home, and on an unfrequented road. Moreover, she had accepted Richard Harris' invitation for a motor ride with misgivings. She did not like him, and said so; but her family hoped for a marriage, and had insisted on her being at least nice to him. So she had resignedly said "yes" when he asked her to go with him. During the ride he had not made himself offensive to her in any way; but she was nervous. The prospect of a long time spent with him on a deserted road did not hold out promise of pleasure.

"Can't you do something?" she asked.

"I'm afraid not—Winifred!"

She started at the tone of his voice. It seemed that her worst fears were realized. She tried to stop him before he got started.

"Now, Dick, I've told you that I don't love you and can't love you. You know you've asked me many times, and I've always said no, and always will. I'm sorry, for I don't want to hurt your feelings; but that's all there is to it."

"Winifred, I know you're just teasing me—leading me on. I love you, and I'm going to have you—" Before she could struggle free from the robes he had caught her in his arms and was trying to kiss her.

"Let me go!" she cried. "You cad!" One arm came free and she planted a stinging slap on his face. His eyes darkened with rage.

"You'll pay me for that!" he ground out, and tried to seize her again; but a hand that seemed made of iron closed on his coat collar and wrenched him out of the car. He fell to the ground. Over him was standing a man he knew.

"Let Me Go!" She Cried.

"Billy Vantine!" Winifred's voice was full of thankfulness. But Billy looked only at the prostrate man at his feet.

"Get out of here!" he snapped.

Richard Harris rose.

"I—I won't leave Winifred—"

"You have forfeited any right you ever had to be with her. Get out! I'll bring the car home. Go, now, before I—" But Richard Harris was already slinking away. He had no stomach for a battle with the husky Billy.

When he had disappeared Winifred's overstrained nerves gave way and she sobbed unrestrainedly. Billy, like the wise man that he was, let her have her cry out and then gently let her tell him the whole story. When she had finished he flushed a dark red.

"The low hound!" he said between his teeth. Then he added:

"Let me look at the car. Possibly I can fix it so we can stagger home somehow."

He made her comfortable on the seat and went around to the front of the car. For awhile she heard him tinkering. Once he asked her where the screwdriver was. Her face lit with hope.

"Can you fix it, do you think?"

"I don't know—but I'll try."

He returned to his tinkering. In a few minutes he straightened himself, a peculiar expression on his face.

"Win," he said, "I don't know whether or not I can fix this car—but there's something else I want to fix—and fix for all time. Win, dear—you know, don't you, that I've loved you for ever and ever so long? I know that your family want you to marry Dick Harris, but tell me—isn't there any hope at all?"

Winifred Davis refrained from looking at him and toyed with the corner of one of the rugs.

"Billy," she said at last, "I know you've loved me; and I—Billy—I love you!"

In a moment he was in the seat beside her, with his arms around her, telling her all the things that lovers have to say; and she did not seem averse to hearing them; in fact, she said a number of things herself which must have been nice things, for Billy Vantine's homely countenance lit with joy as he heard them. Neither of them noticed the passing of time till suddenly Winifred gave a start.

"Billy!" she cried. "Look! The sun's going down, and we're twenty miles from home! If I don't get there in time for dinner mother will nearly die! She'll think all sorts of things! Oh, what will we do!"

Billy grinned.

"Kiss me again, Win," he said, "and I'll see if I can do something to this confounded car."

"Oh, never mind the kiss!" cried Winifred. "Please try to fix it! We must get home!"

But Billy was obdurate.

"There!" she said at last. "There's your kiss—and now, please, please fix that awful machine!"

For answer Billy put his feet on the self-starter. There was a hum and a roar, and the motor burst into life. Winifred looked at him in blank amazement.

"There was nothing wrong with the car," said Billy guiltily. "Dick was lying to you. He pretended that he had broken down."

"But—why did you—"

Billy bent over the wheel.

"Well, to tell you the truth, Win," he said, "I was afraid that if I let this chance go I'd never get up the nerve to tell you again! So I—well, I must plead guilty to deception."

"Billy Vantine, I think you're a horrid, deceitful, darling dear!" cried Winifred. Billy laughed exultantly.

"Those last two words saved my life," he cried. "Hold on to the seat—I'm going to hit sixty all the way home!"

ALARM CLOCK INSOMNIA CURE

At Least, Broken Timepiece Cost This Young Man Some Good Hours of Sleep.

"You may think," said the young man with the spectacles, "that the purpose of an alarm clock is to wake one up. But I've discovered that an alarm clock is used to enable one to sleep.

"I don't see how you make that out," returned his companion, according to the New York Sun. "I know I use mine to wake me up."

"That's what I thought until this week," said the bespectacled youth, "but now I know different. It was this way. A week or so ago my alarm clock was knocked off the bureau, and as no self-respecting clock can be expected to stand that sort of treatment, it refused to work any longer. Oh, well, I thought to myself, I can get up without an alarm.

"My getting up time is 7:15. The first morning without the alarm I woke up at six o'clock. I looked at my watch and then turned over for another snooze. But the thought suddenly occurred to me that I might oversleep. So I lay there tossing about until it was time to get up.

"The second morning it was 5:15 when I first opened my eyes. I tried to go to sleep again, but every five minutes or so I would wake up with a start and look at my watch, fearing I had slept too long.

"This went on for almost a week, and every morning I would wake up a little earlier. So yesterday in desperation I bought a new alarm clock. I'll have to live on beans till next pay day, but it's worth it. Last night I had my first good night's rest since my old alarm clock was broken."

SAYS LITTLE BUT DOES MUCH

Clerk of British House of Commons Is a Silent Though Highly Important Official.

The clerk of the British house of commons is appointed by the prime minister with a salary of £2,000 a year. This is a much bigger salary than he received in the Eighteenth century. In those days he lived chiefly on fees and presents from members of parliament.

The clerk sits at the upper end of the table of the house, and wears a wig and gown. He has the custody of records, signs certain addresses and orders, and reads various documents in the house. He controls the staff of the house, and is responsible for many details in the management of business.

In addition, he is the speaker's principal adviser, and that is why even how speakers seldom make mistakes. He is the great authority on procedure and on all the complicated rules of the house.

This official is usually silent and unobtrusive. The exception occurs when a new speaker is elected.

His position has been described as "the highest and most important official post in the house, and one of the most respected in the civil service; its occupancy has long been a personal distinction and the recognition of eminent capacity."

BANK ACCOUNT FOR BABY

Recommended as the Surest Foundation That Can Be Laid for a Happy Future.

What are you doing for your baby's future happiness?

Have you thought of opening a bank account for your baby?

These are questions that should be given a thought by every parent, writes Cecelia Anthony in Thrift Magazine.

Many newly born babes are presented with gifts in the form of money. Why not start an account for the baby with this money and watch it grow by making regular weekly contributions, instead of using the money to buy clothes or some other articles?

The weekly deposit of $1 at 4 per cent interest for ten years will amount to $638.04; in fifteen years, $1,075.75, and in twenty years, $1,601.96. If a deposit of $3 is made regularly every week for ten years the child will have in its favor the sum of $1,914; in fifteen years the amount will be $3,227.25 and in twenty years $5,378.75.

Of course, as the child grows older he or she will save the pennies, nickels and dimes, and help toward the regular weekly deposit, which will lessen the drain on the parents' pocketbook. In time to come the child will be the sole depositor.

Trade Routes Through Lhasa.

By the trade routes that pass through Lhasa, caravans of sheep, mules, ponies or yaks, laden with wool, hides, cloth, tea-bricks or salt, come and go, arriving generally in December and departing in March, before the spring floods. Better caravan animals than these hardy mules and the small, tough, shaggy horses that also serve as beasts of burden are the yaks. For they can live, if need be, on coarse, stiff pasture, they carry heavy loads, are sure-footed on frozen surfaces and seem not to mind the cold, even when icicles cling to their long black coats and bushy white tails. Then, too, yaks are blessed with horns, on which especially devout Tibetans cut the sacred "Om" formula. As another precaution against attack, the caravan is provided with prayer-wheels and accompanied by horned dogs. But the owners of the mastiffs are not unfriendly to a stranger of good intent. When they meet one, they pull off their caps, push forward their left ears, put out their tongues and bow politely.—Marietta Neff, in Asia Magazine.

Happy Butterflies.

Upon meeting one of their own species, the tiger swallowtail butterflies will execute a kind of aerial waltz as they flit above, below and around each other in their play on the wing.

Coming out into the open fields, their giddy flight leads them here and there in varied course as they visit the flowertops of thistles, golden rod and other attractive plants.

Growing thirsty, down they come to some low, flat bank of a sluggish stream, attracted by the presence of others of their kind, and sip away to their heart's content, pausing only now and then for a brief frolic in the sunlight with some other big black and yellow vagabond of their own sort with no more in its bit of a brain to worry it.—American Forestry Magazine.

A Gormand.

The word "gormand" is too frequently confused with "gourmet," of exactly opposite meaning. A gormand is defined in the dictionaries as a "glutton, a greedy person"—that is to say, a person of industrious but undiscriminating appetite.

The word "gourmet," on the other hand, is defined as "an epicure; a dainty feeder; a connoisseur in wines or meats; a man of keen palate."

Both words were appropriately borrowed from the French, as the French borrowed the art of cooking and eating from the Italians, who in their turn inherited it from the old Romans, the greatest eaters in history, whether as gormands or gourmets.—Chicago Journal.

Evil Conditions in Morocco.

The sloth and misery existing among the men of Morocco strike one on every hand, and a correspondent of the Associated Press during a recent tour found evidences everywhere of the depths to which the natives have sunk. The men, for instance, despise labor of any kind for the purpose of making a living. They think it good, however, for their womenfolk, and see no inconsistency in harnessing their wives to beasts of burden.

At night the men sally forth to rob in the neighboring settlements, for they seem incapable of shaking off their inbred love of theft. Many of them, it is said, would murder a close relative for a silver coin, and it is certain that, even in circumstances of the utmost peril, they will go on thieving expeditions.

Couldn't Demonstrate.

Mrs. Bacon—Who was that man who just called?

Mr. Bacon—Oh, he wanted to sell me a preparation to make my hair grow.

Mrs. Bacon—But doesn't he know enough to take his hat off when he's talking to a gentleman?

Mr. Bacon—He knows enough not to, my dear. The fellow's as bald as a billiard ball.—Yonkers Statesman.

SUCCESS MUST BE PAID FOR

Hard Work and Sacrifice of Many Unnecessary Wants Are Part of the Purchase Price.

The mind is the only force in nature that doesn't wear out with use. Your mind makes your work and your work makes your mind. The more your mind is exercised the greater it grows.

Therefore the business in which you would succeed is unimportant. The one thing to realize is that your mind is a machine which once set in motion along the right lines will make success a certainty.

You want success. It will be yours if you are willing to pay the price for it. And the price is hard work and the sacrifice of all your other wants.

All your habits have been formed by your mind. Most of these habits are waste habits which will never carry you anywhere. Your hard job will be to scrap them and form new habits.

It will be a task of severe discipline to get your mind to "work." But if you have the grit to tackle the job you will in a very short time be conscious of a sense of efficiency which will make easy the doing of the hardest things.—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

TIBETAN MENU NOT VARIED

Majority of the Population Subsists Almost Exclusively on Barley Meal and "Butter Tea."

Tibetans live almost the year round on two things, parched barley meal, called "tsamba," and "butter tea," according to Dr. A. L. Sheldon, writing in the National Geographic Magazine.

Tsamba is made by parching barley and then grinding it into a very fine flour. It becomes a sort of emergency ration, for, being parched, it requires no cooking.

In preparing the other principal article of their diet the Tibetans first make a strong liquid by boiling the coarse Chinese tea, which they prize most highly. The concoction is strained into a churn and to it are added a lump of butter, more or less stale, and a handful of salt. The queer mixture is then churned into an emulsion.

The typical meal among the valley folk of Tibet, and among many of the nomads as well, begins with the drinking of two or three cupfuls of butter tea.

As the Tibetan drinks his hot butter tea, he continually blows back from the rim of his bowl the film of butter that rises to the top. After several bowls of the beverage have been drunk, there is a considerable accumulation of butter. The bowl is then half-filled with the tea emulsion. Into the hot liquid, rich in butter fat, tsamba is now poured, to be kneaded by the fingers into lumps and eaten.

Knives, forks, and spoons are unknown in Tibet—all eating is done with fingers. The wooden bowl is carried in the sheepskin garment next to the skin, and each time after being used it is licked clean with the tongue and replaced in the garment.

WORD CHANGED IN MEANING

Modern Filibuster Is a Comparatively Harmless Proceeding, Considering What It Once Meant.

When a legislator attempts to delay the progress of a measure he disapproves of, in the hope of preventing its passage, spending hours upon hours debating it, he is called a "filibuster." The only parliamentary body in the world where filibustering to the extreme is countenanced and where it has a chance of success is the United States senate.

The real meaning of the word "filibuster" is a lawless adventurer, especially one in quest of plunder. The term is derived from the original filibusters, who were West Indian pirates. The name is traceable to that of the small, fast-sailing vessels which used to be called "filibotes" or "fly-boats."

Gradually the meaning of the expression began to embrace all sorts of military adventure. American usage finally broadened the phrase to such an extent that it now includes those senators or congressmen who use obstructive and dilatory tactics to gain their ends.

Obstructed Vision.

An old merchant who resided in Ireland had a glass eye, which it was his custom to take out and deposit in a tumbler of water each night before retiring. He awoke one morning very thirsty, having on the previous night drank not wisely but too well, and by mistake drank from the tumbler which contained his artificial optic, thereby swallowing same.

His wife, fully aroused and greatly alarmed at the semi-choking condition of her spouse, called to the valet, who was an Irishman, to render assistance.

Pat having promptly arrived, was requested to look down his master's throat to see what caused the obstruction. Proceeding to investigate he saw the eye in question lodged some distance down the passage. Meantime the anxious wife asked:

"Can't you see down, Pat?"

"How can I see down and another fellow looking up?"—London Answers.

Oh what fun the Girl Scouts had last Sunday. They met at Hague and Broad with their brown knapsacks packed full of "eats" and were off to enjoy a bright October day in the great out of doors. Just before they reached their destination, they stopped for a while on an overhead railroad bridge to taste of the melons that had been purchased about an hour before. It was just a little "jog" from there to the place that was to be the journey's end. Following the brown trail that led to the spring, they stopped a while longer to refresh themselves and listened intently to the Indian legend that their leader told of the buried treasure that was hidden beneath the ground that they were standing upon. Every Scout wanted a pick and a shovel to begin to dig for the loot that was placed beside some "Brave's" body years ago to pay the transportation of his remains to the happy hunting ground. Crossing the brook that was fringed with gentians and wild asters, the start was made. Reaching the sandy banks of Big Darby they spread their dinner on the ground under the Sycamore shade near by. The Tenderfoot initiation was held on the hill northwest of "Crusoe's Island," After answering the roll call about 6 p. m., at Hague and Broad, they emphatically expressed their desire to meet one another at the next meeting, which is to be held at Scout Bigham's home, corner of Warren and Sullivant, next Friday at 7 p. m.

Mrs. W. A. Inman (Margaret Donnelly) of Colfax, Washington, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Scott of Highland avenue. Mrs. Inman is a friend of thirty-two years both to Mr. and Mrs. Scott and other Columbus people who at one time were associated with the Athens Hospital. She came east two years ago to attend the G. A. R. Encampment in Columbus and has come on here this year from Toronto where she was sent as a delegate to the Past Presidents' Association of Rebekah Assemblies which convened at Toronto, September 19th. She has spent a few days with relatives in southern Ohio and will be with the Scotts until the latter part of this week. Mrs. Scott gave a luncheon Tuesday, honoring Mrs. Inman, to the old friends in Columbus.

Yaung people from North, East and West, enjoyed a splendid evening on September 28, at the home of Mr. Walley Tucker, 112 North Harris, who gave a party in honor of his nineteenth birthday anniversary. Those present were: Leola Syfers, Mary Denton, Sallie Turley, Annie Turley, Anna Nowell, Esther Woodruff, Sadie Sutton, Mary Porter, Beatrice Howard, Dorothy Strong, Estele Breeden, Nellie Tucker, Fred Hesse, Harry Handley, Ralph Ditchett, Henry Hickle, Miles Robinson, Stanley Nollenberger, Emmett Lorena, Lester Lewis, John Werkhieses, Ernest Handley, Gerald Hayes and Walley Tucker. Various games were played. Mr. Nollenberger furnished a continuous source of amusement for all. Refreshments were served.

A few months ago Mr. Sulzberger, our prominent jeweler and optometrist had a very serious attack of heart trouble which baffled all leading physicians of the city. He then consulted a certain nurse and heart specialist, and under her watchful care, was soon restored to his former health. Being afraid of another sudden attack, he decided to keep this said nurse ever near, so they quietly slipped away and were united in the holy bonds of wedlock. Upon his return to the Hilltop, and congratulations were in order, Freddy says "I sure slipped one over on you wise guys this time. Why, I've been married three months." But the wise guys knew all about it and were wise enough to keep mum. Nothing more would have been said or done had it not been for Fred telling C. J. Kohn, "my wife is very sick and can't stand the least noise, and I have just expected you and your gang to be there at a belling." The truth is they never thought of a belling until he suggested it, so after Mr. Sulzberger moved to his new location and had his wife working in the store every day, the gang thought a little noise wouldn't disturb her, so on Thursday evening, September 29, forty of his friends armed with all manner of noise making devices, went quitely to their home at 211 North Warren avenue, and gave them a genuine old-fashioned belling, after which Mrs. Sulzberger was presented with a beautiful sewing cabinet and Fred with a beautiful baby carriage.

It was then suggested that Fred push the baby carriage down the center of Warren avenue and Broad St. to Dulgar's restaurant and that is where Fred balked and declared he never would do it, but after the bunch gave him his choice of a few things he says all right, I'll push her; and he did, with the noisy bunch following at his heels. At Dulgar's, ice cream and cake was served, and of course cigars to the men, after which Fred gave a very nice talk and faithfully promised that each one present would receive a personal invitation to his next wedding.

SARAH ELIZABETH WILLIAMS WELLS PASSES AWAY AT HER HOME, 146 ELDON AVENUE.

Sarah Elizabeth Williams Wells, born August 21, 1872, in Guyan township near Crown City, Ohio, wife of Armette M. Wells, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah F. Williams, deceased, passed away at her home, 146 Eldon avenue, this city, at 2:30 a. m., September 10, 1921, at the age of 49 years and 20 days.

She was converted at the age of 16 while attending old Mt. Olive U. B. Church (log) in Guyan township, Gallia county, Ohio, and united with that church where she remained a faithful and earnest member until 1907, when she transferred her membership to the new Methodist Episcopal Church, Lincoln Ridge, Gallia county, Ohio, where she continued faithful and devoted in her Christian faith unto the last breath.

She was united in marriage to Armette M. Wells of Creuset, Guyan township, Gallia county, Ohio, February 14, 1891. To this happy union five children were born, all of whom survive; four of which are married; one son, Frank F. Wells, of Benton, Illinois; and four daughters, Mrs. William E. Shoemaker, of Northup, Ohio; Mrs. Meril B. Young, of Columbus, Ohio; Miss Mabel D. Wells, at home; and Mrs. Howell F. Kerns, of Columbus, Ohio.

Mrs. Wells died in a triumphant living faith. She led the life of a model woman and so conducted her affairs of life, complex as they were, that it cannot be said she lived only according to the Golden Rule; it was infinitely more and much greater than that, for it was the life of a true and devoted Christian. She was an example of true motherly devotion in her community and had those personal attainments which reflect to those of association and acquaintance as commanding the very highest respect and esteem. She was a woman loved by those who knew her, and it cannot be said they were few for she leaves, besides her immediate family 6 grandchildren, five brothers and three sisters, friends innumerable.

She was a kind, dutiful, obedient and loving wife; a companion to be proud of; a fondly devoted mother, who lived for her God and family, doing many things for their welfare and comfort even though it required much sacrifice and an unusual amount of effort on her part. All through her many long months of severe and constant suffering, which she bore with exceeding patience, she gloried in her faith in Jesus Christ. The effect of her teachings as the great lessons of life, and the way she lived, will long remain with her true companion and children a sacred memory, which no period of time can efface. She was everything that the name "wife" and "mother" implies. She is the one priceless jewel recalled by her Maker; a jewel no earthly power can call back, and no earthly power can undo that which God has willed. She has gone to her reward that sweet repose which means eterna happiness and rest from all earthly cares and temptations, where, in glory and splendor, God reigns supreme and Satan and his tempters are unknown and the goodness and greatness of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, are reflected in the presence of the angels gathered round the throne of God.

The last sad rites took place just a few miles from her birthplace in the new Crown City, Ohio, cemetery, overlooking the beautiful Ohio river in Gallia county, where relatives and hosts of friends paid a last fitting tribute to what remained and placed their beautiful floral offerings as further evidence of the esteem in which she was held. Rev. Koster officiated with interment by Undertaker John Stevers.

Mother, dear, we loved thee,
And, oh, we loved thee well;
Your leaving us has caused a gap
Which never can be filled.
Your life with us was far too short,
We miss your smiling face.
No more we get your sympathy;
No more that sweet embrace.
Your presence made our home complete,
A happy family of seven,
But, now, to us, there comes a loss
While the angels gain in heaven.

Russell Wright, 19, of 353 Clarendon avenue, received a fractured skull and serious injuries to his left side Saturday evening when his side-car motorcycle collided with the machine of F. B. Groves, driven by R. S. Shaw, 776 West State street, Shaw, preceding Wright's motorcycle east in West Broad street, turned across the street to enter a garage at number 844. Wright was unable to stop and crashed into the automobile. Wright was taken to Mt. Carmel Hospital in another automobile, both his cycle and the automobile driven by Shaw.

A. M. Wells and family wish to express our thanks and appreciation to the neighborn and friends in the sickness and death of our beloved wife and mother.

The Hillcrest Baptist choir started two years ago with a small number of singers, the results attained interested others, and a year ago it doubled itself, with this same body regular work will soon begin for another season of eight months. Additional voices on all parts will be added again, and Mr. Knox who again will do the training, will test out any voices that may come to him within the next two weeks. The intention is to make this choir a real institution of learning, and to built each year of good material until big works can be handled. ## MEN ALSO FOND OF GOSSIP

Masculine Tea Hounds Have Sharp Tongues, Is Assertion Made by English Feminine Writer.

From time immemorial the word gossip has been associated with the feminine gender, writes Rosalie Neish in the London Standard. It is women who are supposed to take away characters, start rumors, and tear reputations into shreds. It may be true that women like talking about one another, and sometimes not over good-naturedly, but are men entirely free from the gossip habit?

What about the club? Are the subjects always serious, and do not personalities form a large part of the conversation? I know a good many club men, and I have often heard with amazement what they have said about one another.

There was a time when men were supposed not only to condemn but actually to dislike a cup of afternoon tea. Perhaps there was a time when men did not gossip, and the tea and the talk have become popular together. But what about Pepys's diary?

Here were really some choice bits of gossip! If, however, you do not believe that men gossip nowadays, ask one in to tea—we will say a barrister, for example. Begin to praise one or two K. C.'s and some of the judges, and see what he will say about them; or ask a politician what he thinks of another politician, or a soldier what he thinks of some of the generals—you can apply this test to all the trades and professions.

SALT WATER MORE BUOYANT

Fact That Is Well Known to Mariners May Be News to Some of Our Readers.

A boy dropped a ball into a small hole and could not get it out, so he poured water into the hole, thinking the ball would float to the surface. As the ball was slightly heavier than the water it remained on the bottom. Then the boy thought of mixing salt with the water, since he knew salt water would float heavier objects than fresh water would. He tried this and was rewarded with the floating ball.

This particular fact is demonstrated at the mouths of rivers. Objects rolling along the bottom of a river, too heavy to come to the top, will rise when carried out to sea. The rule also applies to boats. A ship with a cargo on the sea will sink sometimes a foot or two on entering a fresh water port. If she leaves the port with her cargo, she will rise on entering the ocean. For that reason a ship may be loaded apparently too heavily at a pier and still be all right on the waves.

In building a dam, the fact of salt water's being heavier than fresh must be remembered.—Kansas City Star.

They Serve Humanity.

The man or woman who sits all day before the microscope is serving humanity as truly as did any soldier in the trench. An article in The American Boy entitled "Sixteen-Cylinder Eyes" makes this pregnant comment on the work of the scientific laboratories:

"Science and the microscope are chiefly concerned now with the alteration of the serum of the human blood that renders a person immune from disease and the discovery and isolation of germs of other diseases as yet undiscovered. All over the world there are men and women engaged in this research work in thousands of laboratories. Day after day they sit before their microscopes hoping to trace some sly microbes to their lairs and make their extermination possible. Through this wonderful instrument humanity has been freed from untold misery and an incalculable number of deaths and through its revelations of the future may come undreamed of secrets concerning the very nature of matter and even life itself.

In a Case Like That.

A family that moved recently to a new home on Prospect avenue, well out south, was visited at once by a budding young merchant. He presented himself at the kitchen, a little fellow, one dirty hand continually taking a pencil from behind an ear and then replacing it.

"Want to take milk from us?" he inquired, sure that everyone knew "us." The housewife said she didn't mind. Out came a scrubby pad of paper, which was handed over, with a request:

"Sign here."

"When can we have milk?" the housewife inquired, with an eye to making plans on the next meal.

"Well," said the young merchant desiring to be specific, "just morning and evening, 'cause that's the only time our cows give it."—Kansas City Star.

SAVE THE RACE FROM POISON

Work That Nature Has Ordained for the Leaves Is Indispensable to Humanity.

That we owe a big debt of gratitude to the old elm tree, and to the cinnamon rosebush, and even to the big pigweed that jeers at us from the corn rows, is driven home to us by Solita Solano in an article on the microscope in the American boy.

Every one learns, says the writer, that animals live through breathing in from the air pure oxygen and breathing out poisonous carbon dioxide. But how many ever stop to think where the poison goes after it is breathed out and where our fresh supply of oxygen comes from?

Leaves are four-fifths water and almost all the rest carbon. They get the carbon from the air, breathing it in through multitudes of tiny mouths. In one square inch of a lilac leaf there are 160,000 mouths. These orifices take into the leaves of the world the 1,000,000 carloads of carbon dioxide that are passed daily into the atmosphere. The leaves break up the carbon dioxide into its original elements, carbon and oxygen. They retain the carbon and give us back pure oxygen in return. Thus they maintain a natural equilibrium; we owe our very existence to the trees and plants.

Without the microscope we should never have known about the mouths of the leaves and what an all-important part they play in our lives.

WHEN THE FLESH "CREEPS"

Sensations of Fear and Horror Cause Progressive Contraction of the Erective Muscles.

When one is greatly frightened and impulses go out from the brain centers to the erector muscles the progressive contraction of the latter can be distinctly felt. This sensation commonly attends the emotions of fear and horror and is popularly described as a "creeping" of the flesh.

Impulses which pass out over the nerves from the brain affect various muscles in addition to those attached to the roots of hairs. This fact accounts for the peculiar behavior of the heart when one is badly scared, for the tenseness of the throat and the vocal cords and for the trembling of the hands, etc. A contraction of the muscular tissues controlling the blood vessels partly closes them and so shuts off the supply of blood to the skin. This, of course, results in paleness.

At the same time the numerous sweat glands in the skin are excited and pour forth an unusual amount of perspiration. This causes the oft-mentioned "cold sweat." In reality it is no more cold than any other sweat, but it seems so because it occurs when the skin is chilled, due to the constriction of its arteries and capillaries. —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Dollar With Two Heads.

The only genuine silver dollar with two heads, i. e., a head on each side, is owned by a southern man, who obtained the curio in New Orleans some time ago.

The southerner got this dollar in change, and for some time was unaware that he possessed anything unusual in the coin line. Under one head are the figures "1906," the date of the initial stamping, and under the other head "1909."

After investigation it was found an employee in the New Orleans mint, whose duty it was to run the silver coins through the dies in order that the head might be stamped on it, substituted a current silver dollar for the coin immediately after the head had been stamped, leaving the other side unstamped. This was in 1906. Three years later, he ran the coin through the stamping machine for the reverse side. The fact that a coin had been put in, in the first instance, to replace the halfcoined dollar, prevented detection.

What It Costs to Stop Train.

An ordinary passenger locomotive consumes a pound of fuel for every 52 feet it travels. Each unnecessary stop made with a heavy freight or passenger train represents a fuel loss of from 500 to 750 pounds of coal, depending on the weight of the train, the length of the stop and the grade conditions. A brake-line air leak on a train of 50 freight cars has been known to cause a loss of as much as 2,540 pounds of coal in a ten-hour period. The loss of coal each time a modern locomotive pops off for five minutes is about 75 pounds. If locomotive firemen were to save a little more than one shovelful of coal out of each ton used the total saving would be equal to nearly 1 per cent of all the coal handled. Floyd W. Parsons in the World's Work.

Bird Migration to Siberia.

With the autumn season comes the migration of birds. From Britain they migrate to Africa; in Australia the birds fly away to eastern Siberia. During the Australian winter the snow melts in Siberia and it becomes an elysium for birds from every country of the East. A few days after the snow has gone pansies, anemones, and dwarf roses appear in flower and the birds find a rich store of cranberries, crowberries, and Arctic strawberries for food. The inrush of birds into eastern Siberia at migration times is one of the most marvelous sights in the world; every pool left by the melting snow is black with them. The Australian birds have the longest journey to make of all, coming from 8,000 miles away.

SPEEDING IN THE YEAR 1834

Costly Pastime for New York Stage Driver, Who Was Fined $10 Twice in a Day.

Speeding is an ancient evil in New York streets. As long ago as 1834 the police had their troubles with "road burners," although, of course, they drove horses then, not motor cars. Here's what a newspaper said about the ancestors of the present day sons of Jehu, one of whom was arrested twice in one day, the New York Sun points out:

"The shameful conduct of the omnibus coachmen, who are continually driving their horses through the streets at the top of their speed, has at last attracted the attention of the proper authorities, and yesterday morning Stephen Colvin, the driver of the Samuel W. Seely (Andrews' Dry Dock Line) was brought to the upper police office and fined $10 for fast driving.

"In the course of the afternoon the same man was brought before Justice Hopson at the lower police office on the complaint of Ald. Pickett for furious driving and racing with the merchant stage, driven by Van Kuren Colvin was again fined $10, which has been paid by his employer, and he was liberated. Van Kuren was extremely insolent to the magistrate, and not being able to pay the fine of $10, and in default thereof, was committed to the bridewell."

YIH-PEN WAS JAPANESE NAME

Portuguese Said to Have Been Responsible for the Modern Corrupted Spelling.

The English word "Japan" and the Japanese "Nihon" or "Nippon" are alike corruptions of "Yih-pen," the Chinese pronunciation of two characters literally meaning "sun origin"; that is, "the place the sun comes from," a name given to Japan by the Chinese on account of the position of the archipelago to the east of their own country.

From Chinese Yih-pen, says the East and West News, the Japanese derived the present name Nibon, which was officially adopted, according to the history, in A. D. 670. Before that time the usual native designation of the country was Yamato, properly the name of one of the central provinces. Yamato is the name still preferred in poetry and belles-lettres.

The English name Japan seems to have originated with the Portuguese, who spelled the Chinese Yih-pen Japon, the letter J being silent or similar to H according to their language. This is the way the Spanish and the Portuguese still pronounce Japan. From "Japon" came the English Japan.

Hindu Barber Kept Busy.

The Hindu haircutter is an individual of immense importance in India, and as his duties are many, he is in constant demand. At a birth the Hindu barber is the man employed to carry the eventful news to the various family relatives, whilst at a funeral he shaves the heads of the living—and the dead.

The Hindu haircutter has no shop, and, unlike our barbers, he displays no poles, signs or symbols. He can be seen strolling along near the bazars with a small bundle under his arm or carrying a little bag.

At all religious rites he is to be observed; he bores the girls' ears and noses for the various rings which are worn; and, in fact, the busy Hindu barber will undertake almost any surgical operation.

Besides births and deaths, he attends marriages. At a wedding this busy barber is "best man."

Gladdens Antiquarians.

A discovery which, it is asserted, will form one of the fundamental sources for a history of the Roman empire under Augustus has been made by Dr. Oliverio, an Italian savant, in Cyrene, the ancient Greek colony of Africa, founded in the Seventh century. A London Morning Post correspondent writing from Cyrene, says that excavations at Bengasi (the ancient Berenice, which stood in the midst of the gardens of the Hesperides, near the mouth of the River Lethe) have unearthed a block of marble eight feet long, one face of which bears a flawless Greek inscription of more than 100 lines. It is the translation of a letter from Augustus on the government and administration of justice in Cyrenaica, giving a wonderful insight into the financial and judicial conditions of the country at that time.

HAD IDEA OF STEAM POWER

Ancients Believed to Have Thought of Its Possibilities—Unfortunate French Inventor.

It is written that the elder Hero of Alexandria, Egypt, recognized steam to be kneaded by the fingers into devices to illustrate its action as early as 180 B. C. It also was believed by some of the engineering experts of the Nile valley that the vocal Memnon, famous throughout the Mediterranean countries, really had its marvel from a simple steam arrangement, by which it fairly wheezed its way to fame.

Numerous indications that steam had begun to engage the vagrant thoughts of inventive brains before the Christian era are to be found, but it appears that no one ever made a model of a steam-driven machine, to run on wheels, until 1763, when a Frenchman named Cugnot made such a model. His little engine, with a vertical shaft forward for guiding, looked oddly prophetic of the chassis of a modern automobile. Cugnot's engine was put in motion by the impulsion of two single-acting cylinders, the pistons of which alternately acted on the front wheels. The thing had one virtue outstripping beauty, with which is was not endowed—it ran. It made four or five miles an hour, sometimes. It probably was making five, on a certain day, when it turned a sharp corner in Paris, upset and injured a few of the many who had poured out to see the miracle.

At once the Paris authorities became sure of what they had suspected for weeks, that the devil was in it, and they locked it up in the arsenal, and its history was at an end.

Peculiarities of Human Body.

A curious instance of the care and minuteness with which the human body is now studied, in the effort better to understand its powers and functions, is noted in a paper read at a meeting of the Royal Society in London on "The Rapidity of the Nervous Impulse in Tall and Short Individuals." Even the difference in time required for a "nerve telegram" to traverse the bodies of different persons is regarded as a matter of scientific importance. A series of observations has shown that the length of the nerves does affect the velocity with which an impulse passes between the brain and the extremities, and consequently that more time is needed if the path is long than if it is short. It follows that a short man should feel a step on his corns quicker than a tall man, but the difference is so slight that the offender has no better chance to escape in one case than in the other.

Lava Curios.

The largest volcano in the world is that at Kilauea, in the Hawaii islands. It forms one of the principal attractions to tourists visiting the islands, and one of their desires is to procure a lava specimen as a memento of their visit.

All kinds of coins, pocket knives, brooches and other trinkets are thrown into the lava stream near the edge of the crater. These quickly become encased in the molten mass.

After remaining there for some minutes the guide recovers them with a long stick, when they are allowed to cool.

Through the lava the embedded article can be easily recognized, and such souvenirs are prized and carried away as a reminder of the visit to the world's greatest volcano.

Explains Cuckoo.

Can the cuckoo justly be accused of that lack of parental duty which leads her to deposit her eggs in other birds nests? One is inclined to consider her less harshly when the circumstances are examined. Nature has ordained that to every hen cuckoo born there shall be five or six males. How is she to meet this dilemma, asks a writer in a contemporary? It would, he says, baffle the devices of the most domesticated wife to bring up a family while there are five or six husbands in the house. So she farms out her youngsters and, for the good of her race, philosophically adopts polyandry as her fate.—Chicago Journal.

After Many Years

By FREDERICK HART.

© 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

It was noon—a hot, sticky noon, with the sun shining down on the lowering buildings and populous streets of lower New York as though, not satisfied with the temperature, it was malignantly doing its best to add another three or four degrees to the length of the already stretched mercury. The throngs that flooded the sidewalks and dodged in and out among the stream of street cars, automobiles, and trucks that cluttered about the intersection of Wall and Broad streets were thinly clad—the men in palm beach suits, for the most part, the girls in white filmy garments; but even these efforts could not bring about the desired coolness.

The narrow, high-walled streets caught and held the heat like ovens; each window turned itself into a miniature reflector and multiplied the power of the sun. Only in one square was there promise of relief—in the little block where Trinity church stands, its spire dwarfed by the mighty buildings that crowd it about, but sturdily guarding its sacred plot of grass—the graveyard where Alexander Hamilton and Robert Fulton lie buried, sacred among the booming thunders of commerce.

Here were winding paths and green grass for tired feet, weary of the pound of the cement pavements; and here was the cool, dim interior of the church itself, where shadows drove away the heat and sometimes the dim notes of the organ took the business sick mind away from the racket of typewriters and tickers and gave it soothing melodies to rest and refresh for a space before the afternoon, inexorable, called again to the world of commerce and trade.

Into one of the bypaths leading along a row of flaking brownstone slabs which marked the last resting place of forgotten pioneers of the city walked a girl. She was remarkable in that while obviously dressed with an eye to coolness and comfort she still gave the impression of being fully clad—an effect which many of her sisters abroad in that sultry weather utterly failed to attain. Her step was slow, her eyes on the ground, her face shaded by a plain straw hat; but the face under the hat was, had any one cared to notice, a pretty face—nay, more, a beautiful face. She was looking closely at the gravestones and appeared to be seeking something.

On a bench nearby was sitting a young man. Previous to the appearance of the girl he had apparently been absorbed in an early afternoon edition, though an observer might have noted that he glanced often at the wrought-iron gate of the churchyard and occasionally compared his watch with the clock in the steeple. Apparently he was waiting for something, or some one. When the girl appeared he had folded the newspaper and watched her intently.

She carried a tiny bunch of violets, bought from one of the many flower-hawkers that infest the nearby corners. As she scanned the headstones she paused; then, apparently finding what she sought, she stooped above one of the smallest of the graves, smoothed the grass on the mound with her hand and laid the violets against the slanting headstone. When she straightened up and turned away from her task her eyes were wet. The young man, gathering his courage, arose, approached her and took off his hat.

"I beg your pardon for my forwardness in speaking to you in this unconventional manner," he said. "But I have seen you, once a week, all during the summer place flowers on that little grave. And if you will pardon my curiosity, for which I assure you I have good reason, I should like to ask you why you remember Janet Caldwell, who died in 1793, in this way? Believe me, I am not inspired by mere vulgar curiosity."

The girl looked at him a moment and then decided to speak.

"Have you read the epitaph?" she asked.

"Yes, but I don't remember all of it, except the name and the date."

"Well, it is such a little stone and so alone, and it leans over as though it were tired. And—come and read it."

They went together to the grave and, stooping, the young man deciphered the worn inscription:

HIC JACET
Janet, Daughter of Ephraim and Janet Caldwell,
Age 18 yrs. 3 mos.
1777-1795.
Requiescat in Pace.

"Think of it!" said the girl. "Only sixteen; and her little grave seems so neglected here with all the others. I was sorry for her; and I—I thought she might like the violets—and I—"

The young man was not listening. Instead he was digging in his waistcoat pocket. After some search he produced something and held it in the palm of his hand.

"Would you like to know what she looked like?" he asked.

"Oh!" The girl's face was rosy. "Do you—I mean are you——"

"Look." In the young man's hand was an ancient miniature, the cover snapped back. The girl looked long at the face on the thin plate of ivory.

"Oh," she breathed again, "how beautiful she is!"

"That was painted the year before she died," said the young man quietly. "Her father, Ephraim, was my father's great-great-grandfather. My name is Grant Caldwell and this miniature is all that is left to remember the family of old Ephraim. And you—you thought of her, while I am afraid that I had forgotten her."

The girl's eyes were bright with unshed tears.

"But you'll never forget her now," she said.

"No—not if you'll let me——"

"Let you what?"

"If you'll help me always to remember her—by seeing you again."

There was silence for a moment. Then the girl looked up at him.

"I will," she said simply, and told him her name. Over the little headstone their hands clasped. And high in the tower of Trinity the old clock boomed out the hour as though in benediction on their heads.

MEN HOLD HARVENT HOME "STAG"

The Men's Brotherhood Bible Class of Hoge Memorial Church met Tuesday night, October 11th, in the basement of the church, which the committee in charge had transformed into an autumn corn field. Around the president's chair a scene was made converting the end of the basement into a real rail-fence corn field with all the pumpkins, and wild animals in evidence reminding all of James Whitcomb Riley's "When the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder's in the shock." Quail, 'possums, skunks, etc., gave reality to the scene and made the whole truly a "harvest home."

Messrs. Lear, Biddle, and Price formed the committee on entertainment and a large crowd of men made up the audience. A few reports were heard, after which the male quartette, Jones, Biddle, Deems and Riggle, rendered two selections which were enthusiastically received.

The crowd gathered in a large circle following the brief business session, for games and stunts. As men are but grown up boys and so well did they enter into the sports that 10:30 saw them ready for more fun, but the game was called on account of the late hour and each reported to "friend wife" in good time. The games in which skill and endurance told were "Bus," Herb Deems being chief "buzzer"; "You Tell 'Em" contest drew many a laugh, especially when Dunlop found his fountain pen was "toothless"; "Cock-fighting" tested the endurance of President Chamberlain and Walter Kraus with heavyweight Kraus carrying off the honors; Cliff Kohn and Tom Jones made beautiful roosters, but due to avoirdupois, the judge called the "fight" a draw. John Brown's Baby had an awful cold on his chest. In "Aesthetic Dancing" they all showed the skill of Russian ballet and it was voted it a rare game.

Plenty of home-made pumpkin pie and coffee set the crowd merry at the late hour and it is whispered that Cliff, the Undertaker, made way with a pie and a half, but you can't always believe reports. At least the fact seems to be that Kohn did eat! Thanks were voted the committee and "pie-bakers" and after a flashlight, taken by the pastor, and a general wash-up, the class dismissed for the night. The class meets each Sabbath morning and has a very active membership. Watch 'em grow. Next for the "big feed" in November.

We wish to express our sincere appreciation to our neighbors and friends on the Hilltop for their kindness and floral offerings during our recent sad bereavement.
MR. AND MRS. C. D. WESTENHAVER.

The many friends of Mr. E. J Swigart will be pleased to know he is able to be about again after his painful accident of a few weeks ago.

The double funeral of Mr. and Mrs. William Westenhaver, took place last Monday at the Highland Avenue Friends Church, and was very largely attended.

The tragic death of Mr. and Mrs. Westenhaver by being struck by a train near Cincinnati last Friday, cast a gloom over the Hilltop when the sad news was received here. They were on their way to Florida, going by automobile, and had reached the above place when the fatal accident happened, which caused instant death to both of them and the demolishing of their machine. Mr. and Mrs. Westenhaver had spent the previous winter in Florida for the benefit of Mrs. Westenhaver's health and were bent on the same mission this year.

The bodies arrived here Friday and were taken to the home of their son, Mr. C. D. Westenhaver, 97 North Oakley avenue on Sunday, where a very large number of friends went on Sunday to view the remains.

They are survived by two sons, Mr. C. D. Westenhaver, 97 North Oakley avenue, and L .W. Westenhaver, of Chicago, Ill., also one daughter, Mrs. John Singer, of Lancaster, Ohio.

Mr. Westenhaver was 60 years of age and Mrs. Westenhaver 64 years. They had been residents of the Hilltop for 25 years.

Black and White Tuxedo Sweaters, Seiller's.

The people desire a more equal division of territory between the three schools on the Hilltop. The present district for the John Burrougha school on Sullivant avenue, is from the Imbecile Asylum on the east, to Powell avenue on the west. Extending north on Powell about half way to Broad street, then diagonally from that point to Day avenue, then straight east from Day to the Imbecile. This is a large territory. Many of the beginners are compelled to walk a long distance over a very dangerous thoroughfare.

Sullivant avenue has now become a speedway for automobiles. The street cars and interurbans continually passing add to the dangers of the street. As there are very few sidewalks on Sullivant between the Imbecile. Powell avenue, children are compelled to walk in the street. In rainy or snowy weather they can not walk near the curb because of the depth of the water and the danger of a skidding auto is very great. With winter approaching the conditions will be such that many of the younger children will be compelled to stay at home and the dangers to the older ones will be increased. Let's "lock the barn before the horse is stolen," and see what we can do to prevent serious accidents to our school children.

At a recent meeting held at that school building, a committee was appointed to interview the school board and report results at a later meeting.

Fall coats very cheap at Seiller's.

OBITUARY

Russell Wright, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Wright, was born November 5th, 1902, Columbus, Ohio, died at Mount Carmel Hospital at 4:40 p. m., October 6th, 1921, at the age of 18 years, 11 months and one day. He is survived by his parents and one brother, all of whom reside at 353 Clarendon avenue. He was born, reared and educated on the Hilltop ifthis city. From 1919 until the time of his death, which resulted from a motorcycle accident, he was an employe of the Central Ohio Paper Company.

Russell was a young man loved and respected by all who knew him, and though his loved ones, relatives and friends do not question the wisdom of God, yet his loss will be deeply mourned.

"A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
God in His wisdom has recalled
The boon His love had given,
And though the body slumers here
His soul is safe in heaven."

A DOG'S LIFE AS SEEN FROM BOTH SIDES

Dedicated to Our Neighbor

Blue times to man do come and go,
But to the dog you say "'tis not so."
He is free to go and roam
Till tired, then he'll turn for home.
With not a thought or any care
He need not think of clothes to wear.
When he is tired and wants to sleep,
Turns 'round and piles in a heap.
Oh, really fine, we think 'twould be,
If some one's dog were we.
When summer's sun begins to beat,
We'd seek refuge from the heat.
While to us it is a puzzle
Why they bring that awful muzzle,
But if not that, still there's no hope
For then it's sure to be a rope.
'Tis then we must say good-bye,
For no difference how hard we try
To make our thirst and hunger known
No mercy to us then is shown.
From daylight till dark we growl,
From dark to daylight we howl,
And no one but our neighbors
Seem to show us any favors,
Hence we keep them all awake
From dark till day begins to break,
While our masters all do sleep,
Every night that's in the week.
If some feed would us favor,
We would not disturb our neighbor.

Composed by your neighbor who lies awake all night, listening to your dog bark.

Moral—Because your dog does not chase after you or disturb you is no reason he does not pester others. Your weary sleepy neighbors.

The Sheriff's Prisoner

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

© 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The new sheriff of Armadillo county halted his horse, then abruptly whirled the animal behind a large rock and slipped out of the saddle. From his position he could peer around the rock and obtain a clear view of the Armadillo schoolhouse, forty feet away. It was late on Saturday afternoon and of course there was no school, but the front door of the building was ajar.

It happened that the sheriff was looking for a thief that afternoon, the one who had broken into the schoolhouse and stolen several things belonging to pupils and to Link Larrabee, the school teacher. School books, copy paper, pens, pencils, clothing carelessly left there, stray umbrellas, had vanished into nothingness, and so John Wayne, one of the trustees, had called on the sheriff and in his close-mouthed way vouched the information that it would be well to keep an eye on the schoolhouse.

And the first moment that Sheriff Harry Gray turned a pair of handsome, though honest, blue eyes toward the schoolhouse he scented a clue. Presently he heard footsteps on the bare boards inside, the door opened wider and a big girl stepped out, closing the door softly and locking it. The key she slipped into a pocket of an old gray coat she wore.

On her arm she carried some clothing, one or two coats and a bright wool cap.

She glanced hurriedly around, listened for an instant and then darted around the building and took the trail that led back through the trees toward the river.

The sheriff smiled grimly and shook his head. He was a very young sheriff, and it had not been so many years since he had attended that little schoolhouse himself and absorbed knowledge under the tutelage of Link Larrabee himself, and so that made him very sorry to think that any girl in Armadillo would be small enough to break into the sacred precincts of the school.

On Her Arm She Carried Some Clothing.

"Gee, it's my luck to have to catch a girl, first throw," he grumbled as he mounted his horse and started up the trail after the girl. "She's a mighty pretty one at that—hair like bronze, and some color! What's she doing with a bunch of old rags—hey!" he called abruptly as she stood aside to let him pass.

"Well?" she asked coolly, but he saw the scared look in her eyes and hated himself.

"Where you going with all those clothes and things out of the schoolhouse?"

"You want these?" she asked amazedly, holding them out.

He took them from her willing hands, placing them awkwardly across his saddle bow. "I'm right sorry to have to do this—a nice girl like you—"

The Tale of a Dog

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

"Wisht I had a dollar," from Amos disconsolately.

"Wisht I had er little fyce dawg," from Bert plaintively.

"Wish I had a dollar—and a little fyce dawg too," from Jack greedily.

"Wount nobody never git none of 'em," Amos, the pessimist pronounced.

"Why you reckon not?" Bert demanded.

"I know—cause we-all and we-all's folks are poor as Job's turkey, that had to walk twict to throw a shadder," cried Jack the greedy.

"Suppose your wishes came true—what would you do about it?" a voice from above their heads inquired. Scared into uprightness, the boys looked about them—they had been lying face down, in the Merton old field, after gorging themselves with blackberries and wild plums. On beyond were gnarled old apple trees, round-headed and opaque with fine netted, half-dead lower branches. Starveling fruit dotted and blotched the round heads—the turf-circles beneath them, greener and more alive than the main earth surface, told that now for a generation cattle running out had lain there through midday chewing the cud, and bedded there at night. When the apples "hit," that is to say over-burdened the living branches, orchardless folk came and made them into cider. A big trough dug from the trunk of a poplar lay upside down under the tree nearest the spring, with a rude slatted press, a pen of blocks, and a lever, piled helter skelter beside it.

Apparently the question had been shot from this tree's depths.

Apprehensively the boys sidled toward it, each keeping himself narrow—that is to say, shoulder lapped on the shoulder in front, and lapped in turn by that in the rear. Thus they made a blotchy line—so blotchy it raised a laugh from whoever was in the tree. Followed the cry: "So you think I'm a witch! Come see your mistake! I'm all alive—and bigger, I do believe, than all three of you put together.

Deserved All His Critics Had Said of Him.

With that dropped into sight a plumpish girl, in knickers, norfolk jacket and stout walking shoes. A flat, square case was slung across her breast. She carried a long, light pole with a flimsy wisp at the end. "I hunted so hard I slept the minute I got fixed right up there," she said, nodding toward the apple tree. "And I don't know just where I am, now I'm awake. Tell me, please—is this Possum Paradise?"

"No'm, no'm! Hit's t'urrer way! Over ter yan side, a far piece!" three voices shrilled in varying chorus. "Then I must be somewhere else; but where?" she asked with a whimsical smile. "Also lost. Find me and take me home—then we'll see about the wishes."

"Where is home?" Bert demanded.

"Over Top—the Penningtons live there. I came day before yesterday," she answered.

"Alsht I knowed what you been a-duntin'—and what with," Amos verified.

The girl laughed softly, touched her case and said: "Daren't show you now—they might fly away. But they are butterflies and wasps and things—and they were caught this way," shaking out the net upon the end of the pole and with it imprisoning a vagrant grasshopper. The trio fell upon it, whooping triumph, almost breaking the net and mashing flat its latest captive. Before the boys could untangle themselves they were snatched suddenly upright while a man asked angrily: "What are you ragamuffins doing?" Then, in a different key: "Say, Ellen, have they been bothering you?"

"No—they left that for you," Ellen said ungratefully, making a feint of catching Jack in the recovered net. "Run away, spoilsport," she continued. "I never have luck while you stay. Butterflies must feel how you hate them—and keep out of sight."

"I'm bound to hate rivals I am ashamed of," the newcomer, Gifford Pennington, said scowling. In spite of the scowl he was singularly handsome, black-browed, olive-skinned with red showing in cheek and lip, and fine night-black hair. Lean, almost lathy too—no wonder Ellen Martin appealed to him, aside from her pot of money. His pursuit of her, object matrimony, had lasted two full years without ever winning a positive yes or no.

"I felt sure you were lost. Now that I've found you, I mean to take you home," he said masterfully.

"But you won't," Ellen retorted. "My guides here found me first. And they are engaged to take me—by the longest way round."

"I'll save them the trouble, but not let them lose the profit," Gifford answered, thrusting his hand in his pocket.

Ellen's eyes stayed him. "Understand—this is my affair. I keep my word—always," she said. "Now, off with you, while the offing is good."

Cross-examination of the guides after he had swung away proved easy and fruitful. Amos's dollar was translated into circus, coming next week, and heretofore beyond hope. Bert wanted a little dog playmate to cuddle down outside the blankets and sleep with his head on the pillow—something not to be thought of with the grown-up dogs of grown-up people. Jack said glibly. "Dawg and dollar? Why I—I want 'em—jest 'cause I do." But gentle inquisition brought out that cash would realize his dream of red fire and Roman candles for the Fourth, but over the dog he got red, twisting upon his bare feet until Amos said giggling, "I know—that's ter give Miss Loreeny, our teacher—she says she's so awful lonesome up in her bunjerlo, now her man's done gone."

"Fine. Can we get one right away?" Ellen asked. The guides nodded like a Mandarin chorus. Ole Man Swack. It appeared, had a litter of cockers, fine fat, curly fellows, just weaned. No—he didn't live so fur outen the way—no mor'n er mile—but he was tight as the bark of a tree. Three dollars—think of it!—for a pup you could nigh put in yer pocket. Yet, he never give Anne a cent of the money for all her trouble feeding and brushing and keeping the kennels clean. And she was better lookin' 'n his best dawg—nice every way—never mouthed nor muttered—and always ready to slip you apples or peaches—seeds a God's plenty they had always—and Ole Man wanted five cents a peck for all you took away.

Ole Man, lean, grizzled, stooped doddering on the surface, brier-sharp below, deserved all his critics had said of him. Talk of a trade made him all but human. Yes—he had fine pups—"plague the luck—that gal Anne had 'em all out walkin'—the rascals were gittin' so fat they near lost breath playing.' She couldn't be gone much longer—which way had she gone? Oh, down the medder-road—she was foolish about the creek and posies, and sech. Mought be you could find her ef you traipsed along that way." Ellen smiled, paid the agreed price, and walked off, calling over her shoulder: "Remember I'm to take my pick—and you not quarrel."

She felt unaccountably tender toward this unseen Anne, visioning her as rustic, round and rosy, happy comrade to the puppies, as to the Black-Eyed Susans and hedge roses. It took her all aback to come suddenly at a sharp bend of the way upon a blessed damoiselle, fair, golden, lily-slender, clothed in grass green—and held fast in the arms of Mr. Gifford Pennington.

"Yell! Everybody!" Ellen said low and imperatively. The guides, half sensing her motive, obeyed with a will. So when presently she sauntered forward there was only Anne to receive her, help her choose, and thank her courteously for patronage.

"Take the dog to Miss Loreeny—right off," she ordered. Away went boys and dog with a whoop. Then after a brief talk with Anne, Ellen went toward Tree Top. There she walked into the living room, saying evenly to the assembled family: "Let me announce an engagement. Anne, granddaughter of Mr. James Swack, to Gifford Pennington, Esq."

Yale's Stone Bulldogs.

Four bulldogs in stone represent student life at Yale. The bulldog has been Old Eli's mascot for lo! these many years. One of the dogs, with a wrinkled brow, wears spectacles. He is the student. Another bulldog, brow not so much wrinkled, wears a football player's helmet, a nosepiece with its end gripped in his teeth. He is the hero of the gridiron. Another bulldog wears a soldier's campaign hat, depicting what Yale men have done in the various wars. Still another bulldog has a cap and gown, representing the completion of the college course. Of all the carvings found, these are the four most interesting, although there are faces representing Dr. Hadley, and a few of his predecessors."

The Royal Fish.

The sturgeon is a strange looking creature, being almost covered with flattened bony plates, in the center of each of which is a conical spine. It is said to live to a great age—two hundred years is one estimate, but we have no certain knowledge on the subject. Its air bladder is rich in isinglass, and caviar is prepared from its roe. Its flesh seems to combine the flavors of fish, flesh and fowl, and is really excellent. It was Edward II. who made the sturgeon a royal fish, but it is only sturgeon caught in the Thames which can be claimed as the property of the crown. Sturgeon resembles salmon in that they work up rivers to spawn. The Volga is the principal sturgeon river of Europe.

The Sheriff's Prisoner

had better ride on," she said, stepping [illegible]

"I don't know but what I shall take you along, miss," he said gravely.

"Take me?" There was terror in her voice.

"Yes'm. I should arrest you."

"You? Arrest me?" He was surprised to see that she was holding a little blue-steel weapon in her right hand.

"Got me covered, eh?" he laughed softly, but his eyes did not laugh. He was full of pity for a girl so astoundingly pretty and who was so wicked. "You must be one of Mart Johnson's girls—over at the Creek," he ventured after an uncomfortable moment under the blazing defiance of her eyes.

"Mart Johnson? Who is he?" she asked coldly.

"I thought he might be your father."

"No," she said.

"Well, are you coming with me?" he asked after another moment.

"No."

"[illegible] under arrest, ma'am."

[illegible] a little and then smiled in a friendly way that delighted him. He asked himself why the smile of a mere girl—a girl he was taking to jail, too—should set his heart to galloping.

"Yes, I remember that. I will walk beside you if you don't mind."

He slipped to the ground and tendered his mount. "It's some little ride, miss," he insisted.

Presently she consented, and he lifted her into the big saddle. She clung to the pommel with both hands. He watched her from under his lashes with growing perplexity. Clues were crowding upon him fast enough.

"Do you know Mr. Wayne?" he asked after they had traveled awhile.

She hesitated. "You mean the school trustee?"

"That's right. I'm taking you to his place, Flat Hills. He sent me to catch somebody who was robbing the schoolhouse, and, worse luck, I found you right away, so you've got to see the old gentleman, and if he says lock-up, why I'll be hanged if I take you there!"

"That's good of you," she said gratefully.

"You can't be from Armadillo county, miss; you wouldn't hold on to a saddle that way," he told her.

"What way would you hold it?" she asked demurely.

"Not at all. Armadillo girls ride like squaws. Here's old Wayne's place now. If you don't try to squirm out of it, miss, I'll do the best I can for you, but you better come clean out and tell me the whole thing," he pleaded earnestly.

She bent her head and smiled, then she lifted it proudly. "I'm not trying to squirm out of anything. It is simple. I left some things in the schoolhouse—in fact, my trunk was left there by mistake and I couldn't get anyone to take it to the ranch, so I needed some clothes and I went down and took them out of my trunk. Someone will come for my trunk tomorrow, and now—" She smiled at him wickedly.

"Who are you?" he asked abruptly.

"The new school teacher—stopping at Mr. Wayne's, if you please, Mr. Sheriff, and now that we are here, may I have my things? And oh, thank you!"

She watched him ride away, admiring the swaying grace of horse and rider. "He said he was sorry," she smiled to herself. "I know he isn't sorry, and I am glad, but I was afraid at first. I thought he was a real bandit." She leaned against the post and laughed helplessly.

"You seem mighty happy," grunted Mr. Wayne as he loped across the yard.

"I'm going to be," she ventured daringly. For once their eyes had met and clung, and she knew he would come riding back again, and yet again. "I am happy," she whispered to herself, and it was almost as if she could see the man with dreaming eyes who was riding past the ranch in the darkness, only to see a light in the window of the house which sheltered her.

Development of Gasoline Tractor.

The present type of gasoline tractor finds its prototype in the old steam tractor. The intermediate step was taken when owners of steam tractors took off the steam boiler and mounted a stationary gasoline engine on the old steam-running gear. There were a number of these machines built around 1890, perhaps some a few years before. The first gasoline tractors manufactured from about 1893 to 1902 were slight refinements of the combination steam-and-gasoline outfit. In 1903 a special type of gasoline tractor appeared, and from that time on the industry has had a rapid development. Probably no one man can claim the credit for having built the first tractor.

Radium Clears Through Bureau.

It is doubtful if many persons of the United States know that every bit of radium in the country clears through the bureau of standards in Washington, but such is the case. The fact that the radium presented to Marie Curie reposed in the vaults of the bureau of standards until it was taken to the purser of the S. S. Olympic is a secret which now may be made public.

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 5. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, October 20, 1921 No. 28

Social Stunts

Rare treat in store for music lovers of the Hilltop. The Ladies' Aid Society of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church will present in concert, Miss Lucy Clark, soprano soloist, and Mr. Earl Hughes, tenor, with Mr. Harold Davidson, accompanist, Thursday evening, November 3rd, at 8:15 o'clock. The concert will be given in the church auditorium. Miss Lucy Clark and Mr. Earl Hughes were the soloists at Hoge Memorial during September and were so favorably received in every way that this concert has been secured for the benefit of giving all an opportunity to hear them. Miss Clark is now a member of the quartette at Northminster Presbyterian Church and lately sang before the Rotary Club, having returned recently from Boston, where she had special training and Mr. Hughes is tenor in the choir of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. At a concert given recently in the north end, a crowded house listened to their excellent program. Their recommendation is strong in every way and we invite the Hilltop music lovers to hear them. Tickets 50 cents, may be secured from the Hilltop Undertaking Parlors, the B. H. Slater Pharmacy, or from any member of the Ladies' Aid Society of the church.

How Dates Are Grown in Bags.

The government plant bureau has been trying out a new idea with dates in Arizona, inclosing bunches of them in paper bags while ripening.

By this means sudden changes of temperature and humidity are modified and, as a result, the yield of first quality fruit is doubled.

It is further found that, when all the dates on a tree are treated in this way, the number of pickings required is reduced from twelve to two. Incidentally, they are kept free of dust.

TO THE WOMEN OF THE 11th WARD—PLEASE REGISTER

On Friday and Saturday of this week, from 8 to 2 and from 4 to 9, you will again have an opportunity to get your names on the election books. Go early!

Remember, the new law is in effect and you are not compelled to give your age, just say whether you ar 21 years old, or will be before election day, November 8th, as this is required to give you the privilege of voting.

Age is not measured by years, however, and every woman voter should prove her patriotism by thinking, reading and acting in the living present; contributing her best thought to the welfare of our beloved city. The homemaker and housekeeper are needed to assist in solving many important problems of municipal housekeeping during the next two years.

Indifference to the needs of our larger home, our own Columbus—and to the vital questions pressing for settlement today in this War-torn World, is the only real sign of age.

Let's make the 11th ward registration of women voters, the banner ward in the city! Go early! Mrs. Charles W. Lentz, Rep. 11th Ward League of Women Voters.

For co-operation in the handling of activities in the reopening of W. Broad street, October 31, Colonel Edward Orton, representing a committee from the Chamber of Commerce, Tuesday met with the West Side Boosters' Committee at their headquarters, at 661½ West Broad street.

GLENWOOD LECTURE COURSE

Costumes will be used effectively in the program which the Chapel Singers are to give on the Glenwood Church entertainment course, Thursday evening, October 27. For the church music the choir will use the customary vestments, and appropriate evening costumes will be worn in the presentation of high grade operatic numbers.

There are five members of this company, one of whom is an efficient pianist, capable of entertaining the audience with musical monologues during the customary intermission.

On Wednesday, October 12, Mrs. G. A. Payne, 157 South Eureka avenue, entertained the members of the Hilltop Embroidery Club and their husbands to a 6:30 p. m. dinner.

Mrs. P. G. Gantz, on Wednesday, October 19, entertained the Hilltop Embroidery Club to a 1 p. m. luncheon at her home, 167 North Warren avenue.

There will be a meeting held at the John Burroughs school building next Friday evening, October 21st, at eight o'clock, in the interests of the Hilltop schools. NEW CIVIC ASSOCIATION

The people of the John Burroughs school district have organized a society called the "John Burrough's Civic Association." The object of this association is to co-operate with the school board and the teachers, to promote the welfare of the whole community.

They feel that all the "Hilltop Folks" should be interested in the boundary line which sperates the school districts and feel that the present division is unjust. Some of the very small children who live within two blocks of the Highland Avenue School, are compelled to attend the Broad street school and again any seventh or eighth grade pupil living near either the Broad street or the John Burroughs, has to walk to Highland avenue. They have petitioned the School Board for a seventh and eighth grade at the John Burroughs school, but have been refused on the plea of expense.

This Association is also very much interested in the sidewalk proposition on Sullivant avenue. All pedestrians on Sullivant have to walk in the street because the sidewalks are so few and far between. Many little children have to walk this street four times a day and it is very dangerous.

If people can afford to own a lot on Sullivant, they surely can afford to lay the sidewalks. If they cannot do so, the city should do it for them and charge it up against the property. We can't afford to have the lives of our children jeopardized to save a few dollars.

OBITUARY

On Sunday morning, October 16th, just as the church bells chimed their invitation to the house of prayer, the soul of Ida Taubert Biehl passed into spirit life, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Emilie Barth Schaible, 147 South Eureka avenue.

She had made ready, even anxiously awaited the summons to go and made every plan and preparation for the funeral ceremony and the journey. She was 83 years old and although she suffered greatly, from the complications attending advanced age, she retained her youthful faculties to an extraordinary degree. She had the happy gift of making and retaining friends and will be remembered by a large circle as a great lover of children, flowers and all nature, a great reader and traveler. Three visits to California on different occasions were among the pleasure trips incident to her life.

Mrs. Biehl was born at Unterwellenborn, Thuringen, Germany, and came to America and married Henry Biehl in 1858. He located and established business in Columbus and passed away 38 years ago.

Three children survive: Mrs. Emilie Barth Schaible, Mrs. Chas. Stumm, Detroit, Mich., and Wm. F. Biehl, Stockton, Cal., four grandchildren: Mrs. George Weatherman, 443 South Ogden avenue, Mrs. G. O. Dickenson, South Carolina, and Misses Lillian and Cora Stumm, Detroit, also six great-grandchildren.

The following poem was written by Mrs. Biehl in the late summer in the German language, after the receipt of a parting gift of violets from her son. It was translated, and, by her request, read at the services, which were held at the Schoedinger Chapel at two o'clock, October 18th:

MY SON

The moment, Oh the moment
Will never leave my mind,
When as a farewell token,
With a wreath of beautiful violets,
My bosom, you did adorn.

How quickly beat my heart.
Was it glad? Or did it smart?
Though leaves and blosoms faded
And fragrance all if gone,
Yet treasured is that little wreath
Within a sacred shrine.

I hear you ask the question:
"What is it, Motherh, dear?
That you still keep and cherish
The withered flowered form?"

It is the love that you imparted,
The love that never fades,
It blooms within my mother's heart
Till death my heart invades.

And when I am resting in my casket
I shall miss your last caress,
But this dear wreath of violets
Will stay with me in death.

Good-bye, farewell, my own beloved,
In spirit I press your hand
And thank you for all the kindness
You did bestow on me.

And now with folded hands,
I pray to Thee, O God:
Hear my prayer, my petition,
And guide him through life's journey.
Your Loving Mother.

Marry a Shoplifter?

By R. RAY BAKER.

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

As a department store detective, Bob Jacobs felt that he would make an excellent laundryman. He had always thought himself a pretty fair sleuth, but since the Elston company took him away from the Jenkins agency, he had not been a huge success.

Almost with the beginning of Bob's services at the store the thieving started. That was four weeks ago, and it seemed that the shoplifter was becoming bolder. More and more articles were being missed, some of them useless trinkets but all representing a commercial value.

Finally Mr. Elston called Bob into his private office and asked him how about it.

"You've been with us about a month, Mr. Jacobs," said the proprietor, "and for about the same length of time systematic shoplifting has been going on. Before we engaged a detective we had no trouble with thieves, but now that we have one the shoplifters get busy. We thought it was the proper, up-to-date thing to have a house detective, and that was the reason we hired you. Now, this thing cannot last. I have here a fairly comprehensive list of the articles stolen, and the aggregate of value is quite impressive. The articles cover a broad scope; for instance, here is a 25-cent rag doll, a three-dollar vase, a two-cent whistle and a man's necktie."

"I've done my best," retorted Bob, "but I'll keep at it. I, too, have a list, and I've been studying it. There is such a wide variety of articles taken that they offer absolutely no clew. If I do not catch the culprit within a week I shall tender my resignation."

Bob left the office and in a brown study walked into the notion department. His mind was so preoccupied that he almost ran into his sister Hazel and his fiancee, Clara Summers.

"We're shopping," Hazel told him, "in preparation for the hard times party. Most of the girls from school are going."

They were both pretty young ladies, although of distinctly different types. Hazel was a blonde and she dressed in becoming black; while Clara was a pronounced brunette and was garbed in blue, carrying a parasol to match.

Your Astute Detective Has Solved the Mystery.

The girls were school chums, attending Clayton college, located in a city 100 miles distant. They were home for the summer vacation, which started a month ago.

After exchanging a few pleasantries with the house detective the girls left the store and Bob returned to his problem. Somehow he must catch this shoplifter. He had a good memory for faces, and yet he could not recall seeing any one person in the store a sufficient number of times to arouse suspicion, except, of course, his own sister, who frequently dropped in to see him in company with Clara, and Mr. Elston's daughter, who called for her father every evening and drove him home.

No solution had presented itself when Bob left the store that evening for his home. His mind continued to dwell on the subject until he arrived at the front gate, where he met Hazel and Clara coming out of the house. The sun was shining brightly as it neared the western horizon, but Clara's parasol was not in use.

"Aren't you afraid you'll blister your face?" Bob inquired.

"No," she laughed. "I want a good tan. I just carry the parasol for looks; it matches my dress."

Bob went into the house and sat in the living room, smoking a pipe while he continued his cogitations.

Of a sudden he bounded from his chair and crossed the room, picking up an object that reposed in a corner behind a floor lamp. It was a rag doll.

"Good heavens!" he exclaimed, standing and staring at the doll in his hands. "To think I should come across the first clew in my own home!" He replaced the doll in the corner, and when his sister came home he asked her about it.

"Oh, that," she laughed, "is a present from Clara—for the hard times party."

That started Bob on a trend of thought that was decidedly displeasing. It could not be that Clara was the shoplifter, and yet—it looked bad.

The next day Bob came across Hazel and Clara at one of the lace counters. They were talking to Esther Elston, who also attended Clayton college. They introduced Bob, and after remarking about the excellent weather Miss Elston moved away.

The two girls were again at the Jacobs home that evening when Bob arrived. They were making costumes for the hard times party. Shortly after Bob's arrival Clara prepared to leave and Bob offered to drive her home in his runabout.

Bob loved fresh air and sunshine, and except when it rained he kept the top of the car down. The sun was shining with unusual intensity for so late in the day and he offered to raise the top for Clara's benefit.

"It's not necessary," she said. "I can use the parasol. I'm afraid I will get blistered if I don't have some shade."

She opened the object in question, and as she did so something fluttered from it to the floor of the car. Bob picked it up and handed it to her with a sinking heart. It was a piece of lace.

"Why, where did that come from?" Clara exclaimed in evident surprise.

"Looks like some of Elston's goods," commented Bob stepping on the starter.

"I'm sure I didn't buy it," declared Clara. "It must have dropped in when I was at the store today."

But Bob was convinced, and all night he tossed and tumbled in his bed, his brain in a turmoil. He loved Clara and they were to be married in the fall, but this horrifying discovery was enough to daunt any man on the matrimonial brink. Marry a shoplifter? Impossible!

He was in a trance all the next day, caught between conflicting emotions. Love was arrayed against duty—to himself and his employer. He must reveal the shoplifter; it was what he was paid for, and surely he could not marry the girl in the face of such publicity. Still, he loved her.

That night he came to a decision. He would marry Clara, regardless. He loved her and he would take her for his wife, shoplifter though she was. Perhaps she was a kleptomaniac and not responsible for her thieving ways. If she persisted in the habit he would try to reform her, but his bride she would be at all costs. He would resign his position rather than inform on her, and they would live in some other city.

Two days later Clara came to the store again with Hazel, and Bob lingered by them, determined to watch. Miss Elston was there, waiting to take her father to the golf links, and the girls engaged in conversation at the silk counter. Presently Mr. Elston appeared and his daughter left with him.

"There goes the biggest cut-up in college," commented Hazel. "She keeps the faculty in hot water all the time."

The following morning Mr. Elston again summoned Bob to his office.

"The shoplifter is continuing operations," he announced, "and the week you gave yourself is nearly up. Silks were stolen yesterday and laces the day before. Have you a clew?"

"I have," Bob declared. "I believe I have the shoplifter spotted, but I assure you I dislike revealing her identity."

"What!" exploded the boss. "You mean to say you know the guilty party and yet want to shield her? What do I pay you for, young man? I demand that you solve this mystery!"

"Very well, I shall do so before the day is over."

He waited until Miss Elston arrived and entered her father's office. Then Bob tapped at the door and was told to enter.

"Mr. Elston, I am about to reveal the identity of the shoplifter. She is standing beside you now."

The proprietor's face turned livid, and he seemed about to make an attack on Bob. But Miss Elston stepped forward, smiling sweetly.

"Father, your astute detective has solved the mystery. When I came home from school and learned you had hired a detective I saw an opportunity for some fun—to match my wits against the smart sleuth. So I have been taking things from the store for a month. This is such a prosaic establishment; nothing ever happens, and I thought it was up to me to create some excitement as well as puzzle this bright young man. Clara Summers had talked so much about her detective lover that I decided to show her he wasn't so much. I was terribly brazen about it; even went so far as to give Clara a rag doll I had taken; and the other day I dropped a piece of stolen lace in her parasol, right under Mr. Detective's eyes—and today I got away with some silk while he was talking to his sister and fiancee. I've had the whole store guessing, and it was a lot of fun—and now I'm ready for the penitentiary, father, if you wish it."

"You had me guessing," confessed Bob. "I thought it was Clara—until I saw you take that silk today."

ESTABLISHED BY JEFFERSON

Coast and Geodetic Survey First United States Scientific Bureau Organized.

The average citizen may not be more than vaguely aware that there is such a bureau as the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, but if he will look around his town he will find at the postoffice or the First National bank building or maybe the railway station a small metal plate embedded in the foundation stone upon which are engraved certain cabalistic letters and figures, together with the name of the survey. He will know therefrom that at some time in the past the bureau passed his way and ticketed his town for all time; the "bench mark" that has been thus established is ever thereafter the arbiter of all disputes that have to do with the physical nature of the community in which it is placed, even down to the property lines and metes and bounds of the home place.

The first scientific bureau to be organized by this country, after it had won its independence, is the one now known as the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. The Government early recognized the fact that the prosperity of the country depended upon the safety of navigation and the growth of commerce.

It was during the administration of Thomas Jefferson that Ferdinand R. Hassler, then occupying the chair of mathematics in the military academy at West Point, was commissioned to organize a bureau for the survey of the coasts and harbors of the United States.

Rare Type of Citizen.

"You don't often meet a citizen like Glipping."

"No?"

"He's still proud of his town, despite the fact that he's poor and most of the men he started out with are riding around in limousines."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Looking for a Crop.

Elmer was at a wedding, and when the rice was thrown some fell into Elmer's pocket. Next day when mother put on his sweater he put his hand in his pocket and said: "Look, mother. See the wedding seeds. Shall I ask daddy to plant them?"

Can Had Floated.

A farmer in New Brunswick, descended into his well to regain a creamery can full of milk, which his wife had let fall. The man was astonished to find that the can was afloat on top of the water, and none o the milk missing.

Essentials.

What do "successful" men think made them succeed? What qualities in other men would they think promised an important and useful future? Perhaps the opinions of no group of persons on such matters could be more valued than that of the membership of the American Society of Engineers. Fifteen hundred of these key-men of industry answered a questionnaire on "The Eight Qualities Essential for Success." The voting on a dozen or more qualities, worked out in order of the relative frequency of their selection, resulted in this list being preferred by the engineers: character, judgment, initiative, resourcefulness, ability to handle men enthusiasm, industry, technical training. From this piece of testimony it would seem to be a question of the "man" first, the "engineer" second

Formation of Veins of Gold.

One of the most interesting of nature's processes is that by which cracks in volcanic rocks are filled in with materials brought up in hot solutions from the bowels of the earth. It is by this means that "veins" and "lodes" of gold and silver are formed.

In the eastern part of Iceland there is a locality where such cracks in rocks have been filled in with a pure carbonate of lime which forms clear and beautiful crystals. These crystals called "Iceland spar," have a peculiar property of "polarizing" light, which makes them valuable for use in connection with microscopes and other optical [illegible].

Within the last few years deposits of Iceland spar have been discovered in Sweetgrass county, Mont. and in the Warner range near Cedarville, Cal. Efforts are being made to develop [illegible].

Newfoundland.

Newfoundland has an area of 42,734 square miles, which is not quite six thousand square miles less than the area of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, or it is just twice the area of Nova Scotia alone. Across the straits of Belle Isle and up the north coast of the mainland is Labrador, which is a dependency of Newfoundland. The exact boundary between Labrador and the province of Quebec has not yet been definitely fixed, but Newfoundland claims, at least, 120,000 square miles on the mainland, which added to the island area makes a total of 162,734, which is almost one-half the area of British Columbia.

WHEN THEY GO TO THE PLAY

What a Young Man and His Best Girl Think of Each Other.

The young man and his best girl go to the show.

What the young man thinks and the others think:

"Say, but I gotta peach of a girl tonight; bet every guy in the house is wishin' he was here in my shoes by her side. I guess she ain't tickled with her little self to have me bring her and get seats right up in front. Maybe I ain't no Adonis, but I fit this dress suit like it was made for me. Gotta get one some day."

What the best girl thinks the others think:

"I have to hand it to Bill for knowing enough to get orchestra seats when he's got a good looking girl with him. Gee, but I bet those dames would like to have my good looks. I guess I made a big hit with Bill tonight, but I'm not going to accept him when maybe I can land a fellow with a million or two. Nobody has got anything on me in the way of looks, and they know it, too. I'll bet a lotta 'em are raving about my complexion, too."

What the audience thought about them:

Not a dawgone thing!—Charles W. Perry in Judge.

76 Kinds of Knots.

"You will often hear a person say," an old sea captain said, "that they are going to tie a knot, but few know there are seventy-six kinds of knots. The simple knot is known to everybody, but the other seventy-five are not generally known.

"Some of the knots that the public rarely hear of and yet are used daily in shipping circles are the Englishman's tie, the Staffordshire knot, the slippery hitch, the Turk's head, the running bowline knot, the harness hitch, the surgeon's knot, the clove hitch, the magnus hitch, the rolling hitch, the Spanish windlass and the wall knot."

Troubles.

If you cannot get rid of your troubles you can try being stronger than they are; you are not bound to live under their tyranny. They are a cowardly throng for the most part. Fear them, and they will crush you. Try to run away from them, and they will overtake you. Face them, and they will cower and even vanish.

No one ever yet rid himself of an enemy by hating him. Hatred only brings him from the outer life to the inner, and gives him lodging and power to work greater mischief than ever.

It is possible to be so intent on good manners that we attain nothing else. Even mannners need a heart to make them of much real worth, and sincerity, however polite, it still insincere.

QUAINT OLD ENGLISH TOWN

Place of Infinite Quiet and Rest Poetically Depicted by Great English Novelists.

The town was ancient and compact—a domino of tiled houses and walled gardens, dwarfed by the disproportionate bigness of the church. From the midst of the thoroughfare which divided it in half, fields and trees were visible at either end; and through the gallyport of every street, there flowed in from the country a silent invasion of green grass. Bees and birds appeared to make the majority of the inhabitants; every garden had its row of hives, the eaves of every house were plastered with the nests of swallows, and the pinnacles of the church were flickered about all day long by a multitude of wings. The town was full of Roman foundations; and as I looked out that afternoon from the low windows of the inn, I should scarce have been surprised to see a centurion coming up the street with a fatigue draft of legionnaires. In short, Stallbridge-Minster was one of those towns which appear to be maintained by England for the instruction and delight of the American rambler; to which he seems guided by an instinct not less surprising than the setter's; and which he visits and quits with equal enthusiasm.—"The Wrecker," by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne.

How Word "Farm" Originated.

In this day of unprecedented farm organization and development it is noted that the very words farm and farmer grew out of the first "rural revolution."

As told in a history of the English people it is shown that it came about in the fourteenth century. In describing the peasant's revolt, 1377 to 1381, the history states:

"The lord of the manor, instead of cultivating the demesne through his own bailiff, often found it more convenient and profitable to let the manor to a tenant at a given rate, payable either in money or in kind.

"It is this system of leasing, or rather to the usual term for the rent it entailed (feorm, from the Latin, firma) that we owe the words farm and farmer, the growing use of which make the first step in the rural revolution which we are examining."

SADNESS IN AMERICAN FACE

Peculiarity Almost Invariably Commented On by Visitors Here From Other Nations.

We are a sad race at best, if the views of observant foreigners are to be accepted at par. Every time a stranger from a strange land comes to America with sufficient reputation in one field or another to warrant an interview, something like this occurs:

"What is the thing that strikes you most forcibly regarding Americans, professor?" asks a chorus of ship news reporters.

"The extreme seriousness of mien, the fixed expression of gravity, their sad look," responds the interviewed one.

Not once in a year, but a hundred times, this response greets the questioners. There must be something back of it.

Here in America, creditor of all the world, of wealth a plethora, of resources no limit, of power proved in peace and war, cock o' the walk, unfettered in any political sense, with the "freedom to worship God" as the individual may please guaranteed under the Constitution, and yet characterized by the visage of sorrow!

They tell us this so frequently, these citizens of the older and alleged unhappier world, that there must be truth in it. But why?

The man of "liberal views" in matters of self-control will tell you that it is the puritanical element which furnishes the air of sadness to a whole people; the placidly pious will assert that it is the strained expression of the pleasure-seekers seared with the earmarks of indulgence; the poor will tell you that it is the rich distorting their countenances in agony over their effort to grasp yet more of worldly riches, and the well-to-do will say that it is the poor but ambitious expressing in a scowl their unrequited yearning for what they have not.

The old adage says: "One may smile and smile and be a villain." But why can one not smile and smile and be an American?—Baltimore American.

Wife Must Die With Husband.

When a native dies at Arowi, Australia, his wife is killed. Her arms are pinioned by two other married women, who sit on her legs. A strong rope from plaited fibres is placed round her neck and drawn taut by four men, two on each side, until the blood oozes from the nose and mouth. At this juncture a man places one hand underneath the victim's chin, and the other on the top of her head, and twists the head until the neck is broken. The belief is held that unless the wife is killed the man will not reach the Arrowi equivalent for Heaven, but if both die they immediately go there.

How Could the Poor Boob Know?

He (looking into shop window)—Are they bathing outfits or ballet costumes?

She—Why, John, do you think anybody would show themselves in such a bathing suit? Those are evening gowns.
